DEMON PRIDE

choosing northwestern

By Jessie Gabor

Each year, students from all around the country choose to come to Northwestern State University. Some come for the educational opportunities offered, others come for the promise of organizational involvement.

Symone Giles, a senior psychology major from New Orleans, decided on NSU because of the atmosphere and organizations.

"I came to NSU because of the choir and the small town atmosphere Natchitoches has to offer," Giles said. "I wanted to temporarily get away from the New Orleans vibes and choose a college with a smaller community. It kind of feels like a family here."

While Giles choose NSU because of the atmosphere, others decided on NSU for purely education.

"I decided on NSU almost instantly because of the nursing program," said Laila Rome, a junior nursing major. "I'm extremely passionate about one day becoming a nurse, and NSU has the best BSN program available in Louisiana. Honestly, NSU was a no brainer."

Many students also look to NSU for one main reason: scholarships.

Brandon Swann, a senior politics, philosophy and law major said he choose NSU for the great scholarships.

"I did pretty well in high school, so when NSU offered me a ton of academic scholarships, I couldn't decline," Swann said. "Because I decided to attend NSU, I've saved thousands of dollars on my college education thanks to the abundance of scholarships the university has to offer."

Although Swann originally came to NSU for the scholarships, he's found much more since he's arrived, life-long friends.

"I've met some of the greatest people on the Earth here at NSU. The money may have brought me here, but the friends I've made has made me stay," Swann added.

No matter the reason, attending NSU not only offers many different benefits, but it also offers something no other university can: Demon Pride.

the end of an era

By Jordan Smith

Photography: Karalee Scouten

Dr. Randall Webb's history at Northwestern State University started long before he became president. The former center for the Demon football team and 1965 graduate served as dean of instruction and graduate studies and a professor of mathematics after his return to Natchitoches in 1989. Webb was later named president of the college in 1996.

Webb brought NSU to new levels. Under his reign, Northwestern has seen an increase in enrollment and retention, more high school leaders and scholars enrolled at NSU, an increase in the Demon Athletic program, a dramatic increase in external funding and Northwestern's electronic education has taken the spot as the most extensive in the state.

"He isn't just a figure head," said senior Karalee Scouten. "He's involved and actually cares about the students." Always seen with a warm smile, Webb has been described as supportive and involved by Northwestern students.

Student Activities Board President Alayni Guidry recalls her best memory of Webb when she was presented as Homecoming Queen in 2013. "He walked me down the field and gave me my roses; it's something I'll never forget," said Guidry.

Another fond memory comes from Student Government Association President Kyla Winey. "Right before he announced his retirement, Dr. Webb came into my office and really talked to me. It made me feel like I was more than just any student on campus," said Winey. "I knew he was speaking from the heart."

As the face of Northwestern State University changes, students both past and present will remember Dr. Webb's many accomplishments for the advancement of the college, as well as his dedication to upholding the traditions of NSU.

NEW PRESIDENT

new beginnings

By Jessie Gabor

Photography: Karalee Scouten

Dr. James Henderson, a NSU alumnus, was named the 18th President of Northwestern State University and began his leadership term Jan. 1. Henderson was the editor-in-chief of the Current Sauce as a student as well as a senator on Student Government Association (SGA). Henderson is best known around campus for his advanced use of social media and his commitment to hear the students and faculty. Northwestern is not only Dr. Henderson's alma mater, it's now his home.

Dr. Henderson and his family were welcomed to NSU at the Homecoming football game.

Dr. Webb embraced Dr. Henderson and wished him luck with his new position.

You were the editor-in-chief of the Current Sauce when you were a student here. What changes in student media have you seen since you were a student?

Henderson: It's infinitely better. When we were students, everything was manual. We developed our own pictures and manually laid everything out. It was all a very manual process. Then you add to this fact that we were immature students whose goals were to create controversy! Student media has improved drastically since I was here.

How has NSU changed from when you were a student to now?

Henderson: The world has changed because of technology and Northwestern has been at the forefront when it comes to using it. It's a constant effort.

In other ways, Northwestern hasn't changed at all. I see some of the same interactions going on between students that happened when I was a student. It has the same feel that it has probably had for the past 130 years. It's refreshing to be back home.

Were you involved with any other organizations when you were a student?

Henderson: For a brief time I was a senator in SGA. I was there when we passed the resolution "Naming Nirvana," the official band of Northwestern! It was a very important decision at NSU. I was there when we honored Vic the Demon for beating up, at the time, the NLU Indian mascot at a football game. As you can tell, we made very important decisions!

What are some short-term and long-term goals you have for NSU?

Henderson: My short-term goal is definitely to get a feel for the culture and get an understanding of the people. My long-term goal is understanding what changes need to be made and what needs to be amplified to position us to become the premiere regional university in the country. That's the goal.

It starts with ensuring that students have a quality of student life that's second to none.

What's your strategy to stay connected with the students?

Henderson: I love social media. It allows you to connect with people in ways you never could before. Everything we are doing right now is a foundation for even more integrated communication.

The energy I get from interacting with students is indescribable. I've learned over the past 20 years the transformative impact communication can have on students. I see students when they first come in to college a little lost and uncertain. Then I see the same student walking across the stage to get their diploma. They are walking with confidence. They are empowered to take charge of their economic future.

Is there anything you'd like to say to the students?

Henderson: Don't hesitate to visit with me on campus or on social media. Whether it's just to say "Hi," or even to bring up an issue you're having.

It's also not just me; we have an entire team devoted to ensuring that students have an experience unlike any other university in the country. Reach out and let us know if you need help or if you see an area that needs improvement, or even if it's just to say "thank you." The entire staff and faculty here at Northwestern are tremendous. They are also here to help the students.

NSU STUDENTS BATTLE BIGOTRY ON CAMPUS

By Corey Poole and Natalie Covher of the Natchitoches Times

Photography: Karalee Scouten

NSU students protested back with signs of love and acceptance.

"You students wouldn't know the love of God if it hit you in the face with a Bible preaching," said evangelist Chris LePelly of Tyler, Texas. "Love is not holding hands. Love is not a French kiss. Love is not a one night stand. Love is not an orgasm. Love is the fulfilling of the law of God, which just goes to show that there's not a lot of love for God on this campus."

Calling students to repent, the Consuming Fire Fellowship from Woodville Miss., took their message of hellfire and damnation to the Northwestern campus Monday, Dec. 15.

On her way to class, Brooke Stanley was asked if she was on their list of sinful actions, including "tattoo getters, jewelry worshippers, lukewarm hypocrites, dirty dancers and money hungry career pursuers." Pressed for time during finals week Stanley replied, "Probably." She kept walking as they vehemently condemned her to hell. "I don't agree with what they are doing," she said. "Preaching hate on campus is wrong and disgusting. There should be a limit to what they can do on campus."

Kimberly Mosier, a mass communication major intent on attending seminary, was also asked if she was on their list. She replied, "I am a Christian and I confess my sins and I am not on your list. I understand what you're saying and preaching, but during Christmas season and finals it's not the time."

She tried to reason with the evangelists, quoting Ecclesiastes 3:1, which states that there is a time for everything. They would not listen as she pleaded to show them the scripture in the Bible they were waving inches from students' faces, but they refused.

The four men were only interested in yelling at passersby to repent.

"Unless you repent you shall perish. All men must repent," said LePelly.

His mission was to spread fear across the campus by preaching the bible and calling college students to repent. While conducting an interview, LePelly called the lifestyle editor at the Natchitoches Times a jezebel for pursuing a career and not "staying in the kitchen where she belongs."

NSU was the 51st campus the evangelists visited this year. LePelly accused every passing student of being "damned to hell" and said he assumed that the "shorty short wearing, rap music listening, potty mouths" will be consumed in fire.

He believes the Bible should only be interpreted in the way his church interpreted it and all other interpretations are wrong and will land the interpreter in hell.

Evangelist Micah Williams wasn't worried that their harsh criticisms would stress students out during finals because they should be more stressed over their condemned souls he said.

As word spread of the evangelists' presence, students gathered to counter protest. An organizer of the peaceful protest, Quinn Bowermeister said, "I saw this as an opportunity to show NSU and LSMSA students that what was being preached by the gentlemen on campus shouldn't be taken as truth. As a homosexual woman, I am still very much a Catholic Christian. My sign said, 'My God loves ALL,' meaning that no matter your race, religion, cultural background, orientation, gender, or occupation, God is going to love you. It's so important to make sure that young members of the LGBTQ community are shown love and acceptance by their peers. There are too many young men and women taking their own lives because of hatred spread by people like the men on campus today. I chose to speak out today because we had to do something to show them that love is universal and their hate on our campus would be met with nothing less than all the love we had to show them."

Faithful Demons made their own posters marked with phrases including "God loves you no matter what," "God is love," "We love you" and "My God loves all."

One message the Fellowship spread to the students said that women should not be athletes because that's not what God intended. Emily Deen asked the men to elaborate on their statement as many female students at NSU possess great athletic abilities. After confronting the men with her questions she was ignored.

"NSU is full of caring, concerned students who oppose the slander of themselves and their peers, and will rally to show each other support. I heard many people talking with these men today, using both reason and passion to show their distaste," said Dean. "I appreciate the NSU officials and police for escorting these terrorists off campus today. I understand they couldn't be forcibly removed from campus because of free speech rights, but giving them a time limit and then escorting them off campus was a favorable compromise."

Students fought the visitors with messages of love as they encircled the evangelists and held hands chanting "Fork um Demons." The Consuming Fire Fellowship knew the fight was over when the air filled with the Demon Fight Song.

SMOKE FREE CAMPUS

NSU goes tobacco free

By Emily Fontenot

The new Tobacco-Free Policy became a subject of controversy and debate among NSU students and faculty after its implementation on Aug. 1, 2014, forever altering the campus landscape by prohibiting the use of all tobacco products and e-cigarettes on university grounds.

Gone were the days of taking smoke breaks outside Kyser Hall or congregating outside the Creative and Performing Arts Building for a smoke after practice. For some, this meant not having to run into a cloud of smoke between classes. For others, however, it meant a complete change of lifestyle.

The state legislature passed a law in 2013 requiring every college in Louisiana to enforce a smoke-free policy starting the fall semester of 2014. Each college had the option of developing a tobacco-free policy as well, and NSU administration chose to go tobacco-free, tagging e-cigarettes and chewing tobacco onto the list of products prohibited by the state's smoke-free law.

Sophomore Laci Parker felt that the university had overstepped its boundaries.

"I think that banning actual cigarettes is fine, but banning e-cigs... that doesn't seem fair to me." Parker said it seemed unfair that e-cigarettes were made for public places but were illegal on university grounds.

Vice President for University Affairs Marcus Jones said the university's choice to go tobacco-free was made for a number of reasons. He explained that the state's smoke-free law was designed to promote health and wellness for the entire campus, including users, and that NSU chose to take it a step further by banning e-cigarettes and chewing tobacco primarily for consistency.

He said that the university chose to ban e-cigarettes in a "proactive" move which anticipated the effects of current research concerning their health risks.

Jones added that a major factor in the administration's decision was the fact that the NCAA prohibited tobacco use among athletes and coaches during all practices and competitions. The administration decided to make the tobacco-free policy uniform throughout campus.

He purposefully asked certain faculty who smoked to be a part of the committee in order to get feedback on these issues.

Jones said that the state would provide smokers and tobacco-users with resources to help them quit if they chose to do so. Some faculty members at NSU did use the new policy as motivation to quit smoking. Phil Kidd, tech director for the theater department, said he used Aug. 1 as his "quit day."

"I think any long-time smoker knows that they should," he said. "I spend most of my time on campus, so I may as well use that as my opportunity."

Scholars' College Director William Housel hadn't been smoking at home and was working on quitting completely. He said that through the new law, he was trying "to summon his courage" and stop altogether.

Others, like Scholars' College Administrative Coordinator Rhonda Wood did not view the new policy as an opportunity for change, but as an unjustified intrusion of the state and the university into what should be a personal decision.

Wood had to significantly alter her routine after the law was put in effect Aug. 1. She had to leave campus during the day in order to smoke, and she sympathized with students required to live on campus.

Junior Heidi Neubig said that although she didn't smoke, she liked knowing that she had the freedom to smoke. She felt the previous law, which required people to smoke at least 25-feet away from university buildings, was sufficient. She also said that she expected avid smokers to find a way around the law.

"The police will try to enforce it, but I'm not sure how effective it'll be," she said. "They can't be everywhere at once."

Detective Doug Prescott of the University Police said that officers would write citations, but that he expected many people to skirt the rules.

Whether students and faculty adopted it as a health and wellness initiative for their own lives or viewed it as an invasion of personal freedom, everyone had something to say about NSU's tobacco-free law, and no one was left untouched by its influence.

Demetrius Eubanks longed for a smoke break outside Kyser Hall.

Most freshmen came to register for classes, some came to meet new friends and to enjoy a few days of freshmen freedom, but all came to the NSU 2014 Freshmen Connection to connect and learn about Northwestern State University, their new home for the next few years.

More than 900 incoming students attended this year's new student orientation in an attempt to feel more at-home with their new life. The two-day event was filled with activities, such as the Connectors' welcome dance, campus tours and the always competitive "Freshmen Follies" in which the winner claimed the coveted Freshmen Follies Champion T-shirt.

Mason Roark, freshman biology major, said that his favorite part of Freshmen Connection was, "After winning the Freshmen Follies, I was able to wear the follies T-shirt with Demon Pride."

The various games and other activities that the freshmen participated in were geared towards either meeting new friends or getting ready for life on the NSU campus. The fast-paced crash course in student life also gave future students a brief history of NSU and the traditions that are involved with everyday life as a Demon.

Students stayed in the dorms, ate in the cafeteria and enjoyed the all-inclusive "Demon Lifestyle" for the few days they were at connection.

Freshmen Connection could not have taken place without the dedication, support and the fiery personalities of all of the Freshmen Connectors.

"I just really tried to get them excited and ready for the connection and more importantly, their freshman year," said Miranda Degraw, sophomore psychology major, "I tried to encourage them to be involved in all of the great organizations around campus."

The connectors attended several workshops, a semester-long class and had to attend all three separate orientations.

Jack Fletcher, senior business administration major, was a Connection Program coordinator this year and played a key role in planning this year's event. He said, "The biggest thing we tried to instill in the Connectors was a sense of confidence in themselves and their abilities. They needed to know they were picked for a reason and to build upon their leadership skills."

During Connection training, the Connectors were instructed to effectively communicate and interact with the incoming freshmen as if they were in the freshmen's footsteps. The transition from the security of home and high school to the freedom and responsibility of college can be stressful, but the faithful Connectors and the engaging and accelerated Freshmen Connection made it easier.

MOVE-IN DAY

freedom at last

By Chelsea Taylor

Photography: Karalee Scouten

The biggest day of the year had finally arrived: Move-In Day at Northwestern State University. Hundreds of students from all over the South and even European countries moved into the dorm rooms on campus.

“When I lived in Puerto Rico, I lived with my aunt. I didn’t have to pay for housing and meals. I miss Puerto Rico, but things here are so much more exciting,” Natalia Alvarez said.

Several organizations on campus helped students move into their dorm rooms such as Freshman Connectors, River Campus Ministries, Wesley Ministries and Chi Alpha Campus Ministries.

“Move-in Day is a lot of work and time, but it’s a blessing to serve others. It was cool to see a person moved in within five to ten minutes,” senior Sandra McPherson, RCM member, said.

While the weather was clear and sunny, the temperature was in the 90s.

“It always seems like they pick the hottest day of the year for students to move in,” senior Andrew Johnson said.

“It was really hot, but worth it,” sophomore Lyia Kennedy said.

Students checked-in and moved into NSU's campus housing.

"It always seems like they pick the hottest day of the year for students to move in."

CAMPUS TRADITIONS

a legacy in sports

By Kathleen Barkley

Photography: Karalee Scouten

“Deeply-engrained, proud and powerful,” are the three words Northwestern State University’s Sports Information Director Doug Ireland uses to describe the traditions on campus. Ireland has worked for NSU for 25 years. During that time, he has experienced many traditions, old and new. Whether it’s Chief Caddo, Move-In Day or Waddell Day, the traditions of the campus are near and dear to his heart.

“Chief Caddo is obviously the most fun of the three traditions,” he admits. The annual football game between Northwestern State University and Stephen F. Austin University is a tradition that every student, faculty member and fan from both universities is familiar with. “The game emulates community and togetherness. You can compete with someone and have the utmost respect for them,” Ireland said about the classic rivalry.

Although Chief Caddo is the most popular of the NSU traditions, Ireland witnessed a tradition be created. On March 1, 2004, Demon football player Chris Waddell passed away suddenly of Kawasaki Syndrome during a spring practice. In his honor, the Demons began Waddell Day. The tradition began on March 1, 2005, a year after Waddell’s death. NSU athletes dedicate this day to community service projects in honor of a fallen athlete. Last academic year, the Demon athletic department dedicated over 6,000 hours to community service in Waddell’s honor.

“We can’t turn away from being engaged to our fellow man,” Ireland said. The tradition of Waddell Days shows the Demon athletes’ respect for the memory of Chris Waddell and that NSU is about more than sports, it is about community.

“Traditions are what elevate us because they honor the best of the past, they bring pride to the institution and they imbue the new and young faculty, staff and students with Northwestern State University tries and aspires to be,” Ireland said.

No matter which tradition is your favorite, it is certain NSU is a campus rich with traditions that will continue to multiply over time.

NSU sports legends are displayed in Prather Coliseum.

HOMECOMING KING & QUEEN

kaymin carter and bria williams

By Jessie Gabor
Photography: Karalee Scouten

Q: What was your first reaction when you found out you were Homecoming King and Queen?

K: My reaction was a shout of joy! The day that the results came I was at track practice and I found out from our athletic trainer. She screamed it at me and of course I had to reciprocate her excitement!

B: I was in biology lab and I saw the post on Facebook. I immediately freaked out, and ran outside to the Kyser brickway and called my friend screaming. I went back inside and continued to finish the lab for the day. At some point during this, I stopped breathing.

Q: What was your favorite part of the experience?

K: My favorite part of the experience was choreographing the lip-sync dance.

B: My favorite part was the crowning process! The crown is so cute! I looked back on the pictures, and I was smiling extremely hard. It's kind of embarrassing! At one point, Dr. Webb kissed me on that cheek! That made me laugh.

Q: What organizations are you involved in around campus?

K: I am the Student Activities Board treasurer, Tri Beta Honor Society secretary, Blue Key Honor Society treasurer and a hurdler on the track team.

B: The first two organizations I joined in college were Helping Hands and Student Government Association. I am also part of Purple Jackets Honors Society, Blue Key Honors Society, Alpha Lambda Delta Honors Society, Freshman Connection and First Year Experience. I am a member of the Louisiana Scholars' College Forum Council and I was an ambassador for the Louisiana Scholars' College and continue to work in the office currently.

Q: Does being Homecoming King and Queen come with any responsibilities? If so, what?

K: We have tons to do, but the main responsibility we had that was definitely interesting was choreographing lip-sync.

B: The title comes with a lot of responsibly! For example, you have to look presentable for an entire week! There are different meetings and events the king and I had to attend, and you definitely can't wear sweatpants there. Putting on make-up every day is too much. Also, the king and I were in charge of making up the Homecoming Court's dance for lip-sync! Because I have no previous dance experience, my inner Beyoncé was released, and our dance came out great, fortunately.

MR. & MISS NSU

cody whitaker and alexis reliford

By Jordan Smith

Photography: Gary Hardamon

Q: How does it feel to represent Northwestern State University as Mr. and Miss NSU?

C: I feel truly blessed. I am beyond thankful that the student body voted me the highest honor that a student can be given at this university. I am excited and ready to give back to the university that has given me so much in my scholastic and student life career.

A: It feels amazing to be Miss NSU. I'm truly thankful, humbled and proud that my peers think of me as worthy to represent Northwestern State University and I'm eager to make them proud. I never could've imagined that this would happen, especially since I originally didn't want to attend NSU. I had completely decided against it in high school and suddenly after attending the university's Spring Senior Day in my final semester, my mind changed and I chose to become a Demon. Rather NSU and I chose each other! I'm also proud to follow in the footsteps of one of sorority chapter's charter members who was Miss NSU 1974-1975, the first African American woman to receive the honor.

Q: What exactly do Mr. and Miss NSU do?

C: Mr. and Miss NSU are the faces of the university. We represent NSU at many functions regarding the university and the community and sometimes out of the town as well. We also perform host/hostess duties at NSU and surrounding areas.

A: Traditionally Mr. and Miss just get presented at the last home football game, deliver the prayer at graduation and attend some other university functions, but, like Cody said, we would like to change that this year and become more involved on campus and in the community.

Q: So what will you be changing to the duties of Mr. and Miss NSU?

C: We plan to do many community service projects, speaking engagements throughout Natchitoches community and surrounding areas, and hosting special events for the students of NSU. I feel that since we are the face of NSU, we should be readily available for all students at all times.

EXPECTATION VS. REALITY

finding a balance

By Hunter Horton

Northwestern State University welcomed over 1,500 new freshmen this year and with the new freedom came new responsibilities and new lifestyles. As most freshmen went from being the “top dogs” in high school to being the “newbies” on campus, there were harsh realities that the freshmen learned on a daily basis. For many new students, the changes were challenging, but for some newly-independents the changes were much needed alterations to a monotonous high school lifestyle.

One of the most noticeable differences in the new life was the freedom that each student enjoyed as a new college freshman. The freedom is something that not all high school seniors were granted and with this new found freedom came with great responsibility. The expectation of college is late night “studying” sessions and fun, curfew-free evenings, but when students arrive on campus they are met with a different reality. Most students expect the same array of friends available for constant communication and fun, but again, students must welcome that things are not always as they appear.

Upon arrival, students are met with the reality that they now have to buy groceries without the constant support of their mothers, set their own sleep and study schedules and, most importantly, they must now take responsibility for their actions. Once school was in full swing and students were beginning to feel comfortable with their classes and the professors, they started to realize that college was not at all like the carefree, lighthearted nature of high school.

Kiera White, freshman business administrator major, stated, “The most noticeable difference between high school and college is the fact that the professors cared a lot more than everyone led me to believe.” High school teachers and former college students warned soon-to-be freshmen that university professors would not care, fail you for wandering eyes on exam day and not adjust the air temperature, but when the class of 2018 walked into NSU they were met with a radically different atmosphere.

Most high school seniors do not even know what they will be majoring in upon graduation, when they decide to come to NSU they are met with the reality that college is an establishment of higher learning, but is definitely a place of more enjoyment and fun than high school.

I was convinced my classes were going to be really hard and that I wouldn't know my teachers, but my classes ended up being great and the teachers were very helpful!

-Brooke Anderson, junior

I thought making friends was going to be super hard, but it was actually very easy and everyone else was just as scared as I was about not making friends.

-Brook Stanley, freshman

I thought it would be difficult being involved in so many organizations, but it's not hard to be involved at NSU. I love that unique characteristic of the college.

-Faith Stanfield, sophomore

Being an English major, I never thought I was going to graduate with honors. Four years later, I'm graduating with honors because of my amazing professors.

-Dana Bergeron, senior

I thought I'd be homesick, but after I found my Phi Mu sisters I hate leaving!

DORM LIFE

a space of one's own

By Chelsea Taylor
Photography: Katelon Ramos

Moving away to college can be hard. It's a new place, with a lot of new people, new food and new classes. The first thing most people do when they get into their dorm room is to decorate and move things around the way they want them. After all, that will be their home for the next 10 months.

Some people like to live in a simple environment with only the necessities. Junior biology major living in University Place Eric Santini is one of those people. There are no decorations on his walls or bright colors.

"It was a little hard to make the room feel like home because I share a room," Santini said. "All I really have are the necessities. I have sheets on my bed, clothes, and a picture of my girlfriend, Natalia. The only thing that I have that isn't a necessity is a stuffed Pikachu, and that's because Pikachu is cool."

Simply adding pops of color throughout the room can make it feel more like home. Adding curtains, colorful bedding, artwork or pictures can change the feeling of the whole room.

Senior Juliet Johnson, a biology major, has lived on campus for all four years she has attended Northwestern

State University. Johnson lives in University Columns, where she is able to have her own room and full kitchen, which in itself, is enough to make it feel like home. Johnson's room has purple curtains and pictures hung on the walls.

"I had to make it where the walls weren't all white. When it was nothing but white in here, it felt like an asylum. Just adding what little bit of color I did made it feel more like home," Johnson said.

Adding color may not work for some people. Some people prefer to have reminders of past events, artwork someone has made for them or pictures of their loved ones hanging up.

Casey and Corey Johnson, freshman sisters, decided to live together their first year of college. The twins share an apartment in University Columns. Both girls have a corkboard hanging on their wall in their dorm room. Although they are twins, their personalities are different and it shows in what they have placed on those corkboards.

"It's something I can be creative with. I can put whatever I want on it. I can put random things on there or things that mean something to me. Mostly, whatever I find to be important goes on that board. It's like me on a board," Casey Johnson said.

While Casey has random items all over her board, Corey prefers to have pictures of her loved ones on her board. The pictures are of her best friends, her brothers, her parents and her and Casey.

"My closest friends and my family all have pictures on that board. If I care about you at all, your picture will be on that board," Corey Johnson said.

Living on campus may require students to share their room with others. No one likes to have to share his or her room, but sometimes you have no choice.

"Sharing a room with someone else can be difficult at times. My roommate and I have different interests and that can cause problems sometimes," Andrew Johnson, senior and music business major, said about living in University Place. "As for making my room feel like home, I didn't have to do much. I had to add some bedding for a comfortable night's sleep. I brought a cross to hang up and pictures of the people I care about. The rest are necessities."

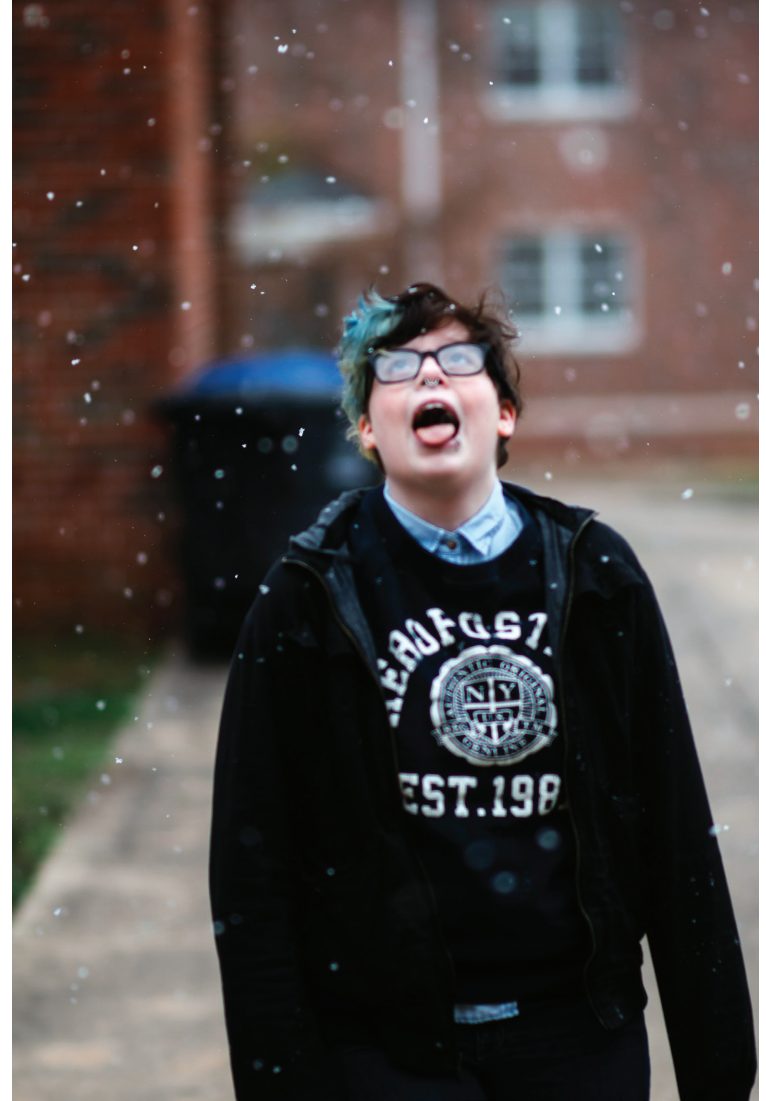

Freshmen Abigail Welch and Brook Stanley used Welch's dorm room to study for an upcoming test.

SNOW DAY

louisiana winter wonderland

By Emily Fontenot

Photography: Karalee Scouten

The class hit the perennial afternoon wall of sleep, and the discussion died down. The sound of the wind whipping around the building became deafening, and a student stood up to close the window. Her eyes widened in disbelief. “Snow!” she shouted. The class flew to the window and sprinted outside in hopes of catching a snowflake on their tongues. Little did they know that the snow was there to stay.

The season of winter is only a hiatus between fall and spring for most Louisiana natives, with little to show for itself but dead leaves and the occasional icy windshield. Snow covered rooftops are for Christmas cards and wrapping paper, not real life. Students got the snow days of their dreams, however, when snow covered Natchitoches in a layer of white, giving them not one, but four “snow days” where school was canceled in Spring 2014.

Junior liberal arts major with a concentration in scientific inquiry, Rose Tusa spent her snow days outside playing in the snow with friends.

“It was great to be able to see snow in Louisiana,” Tusa said. “We were able to build a snowman and take lots of pictures. We also had to spend our days off doing lots of homework because our professors still emailed us assignments.”

Photographers had a field day. Students pulled the tags off their heavy-duty winter wear and grabbed one of the many photographers on campus to capture the rare occasion on camera. They braved the cold to get students pictures of a lifetime.

“It was the coldest day of my life,” senior graphic and fine arts major and photography minor Tray Cooper said about his experience taking pictures in the snow. “I couldn’t feel my feet for two days after that. When I looked in my closet and only saw Vans, I knew I was in trouble.”

Junior double major in liberal arts and education Chelsea Maielli decided to take advantage of the snow with a little adventure. She and her friends in Theta Chi Fraternity took a plastic garbage can lid and slid down the hill behind University Place II.

The snow days brought many students together who, under normal circumstances, may not have interacted. Bonded together by their mutual love of snowballs and snowmen, students made memories with the most unlikely of friends. Many faces were obscured by scarves and skiwear, making students more likely to put themselves out there. Junior psychology major Danielle Tyrney experienced one such occasion in which strangers quickly became friends during a snowball fight outside of her dorm room at University Columns.

“While we were out there, a few people we had never met joined us, and we had tons of fun,” Tyrney said.

However they chose to spend their snow days, students of 2014 experienced a rare moment in history when snow came to Natchitoches.

What's happening?

Yik Yak is the name of the latest app released on the App Store. According to TechCrunch, the app has reached 100,000 users in the past three months and its popularity just keeps growing. Yik Yak is an app for users to post anonymous opinions for anyone in the area to see. It is essentially a bulletin board, displaying messages from anyone who takes the time to write a message, to be seen by others and shared around campus.

This app has really launched in school, mostly university, settings. With more than 15,000 messages going up each day, students are having no problem thinking of anonymous comments to post. Most of the comments involve personal opinions on professors, classes, and in bad situations, fellow students. Like most anonymous blogs, many people take it as a chance to put thoughts out that they would not normally say to someone in person. This creates problems as it becomes cyber-bullying. The NoBullying campaign reported the dangers of this app as the city of Chicago blocked students of all ages from using Yik Yak. Many other schools around the U.S. have also disconnected access to the server while on campus as it violates anti-bullying rules. However, people find ways to keep on posting.

Since being created, the app has been able to craft a type of privacy setting. At NSU specifically, the app does not open when in the vicinity of an elementary or high school close to campus. Yik Yak is able to record your general location, therefore when you are in the area of a school, the screen will say, "You appear to be using this too close to a school. Yik Yak is for adults only."

The adults of the world, who cannot be protected by this feature, scroll up and down to see either useful information regarding NSU events, "Make sure y'all come out to Lip Sync tomorrow at AA Fredricks;" or anonymous fashion tips, "To the girl with the crop top, you are supposed to wear pants, not leggings!;" or just a kind message to get through the day, "Halfway through the week, keep your head up everyone!". Not every message shines a negative light on the students at NSU, however, some comments can be harsh at times.

Dr. Keith Ablow of the Fox News Medical A-Team reported, "Yik Yak can turn a school into a virtual chat room where everyone can post his or her comments anonymously." The app is free for anyone to download and for anyone to post a comment. Ablow continued, "Untruthful, mean, character-assassinating short messages are seen by all users in a specific geographic area."

Yik Yak works by allowing students to leave comments at any time of the day, for anyone to see. The app shows a list of all the comments that have been sent in your location in three hours. Once the comment has been visible for three hours, it is deleted from the history on the page. However, the comments are ranked by readers and either receive an "up" arrow, or a "down" arrow. These symbols essentially stand for a like or dislike to the comment. If five or more dislikes are displayed on a comment, it is automatically deleted. Comments happen so quickly that some responses take seconds to reply.

As one anonymous student posted, "I love how Yik Yak is giving some of you the courage you never had to talk about people."

FASHION ON CAMPUS

“wake up, dress up and show up”

By Kathleen Barkley

Photography: DeAna Meshell

When you're a college student stuck in a town without a shopping mall, keeping up with the latest trends can be hard. Luckily, the trends today are not hard to keep up with. Many young ladies wear long-sleeved sorority T-shirts, shorts and jewel accentuated flats to class. On the other hand, young men model colored board shorts, Polo's in accent colors and Sperry's boat shoes.

In 20 years, we might look back and laugh and say, “Why did we wear these ridiculous outfits?” But, all agree that the looks are comfortable, affordable and college-student-approved.

When the popular sorority and fraternity looks are not being worn, and students prefer to get more dressed up, classy looks are coming back in style. Skinny jeans, peplum tops and heels with plenty of bling can be seen frequently around campus.

For 21-year-old junior Kelsey Newman, Giorgio Armani inspires her fashion decisions. Although a men's fashion designer, Newman looks up to him because he was the first fashion designer to reject models with a Body Mass Index lower than 18.

“In my eyes, he is truly a living legend. His approach influenced fashion for the better,” Newman said. The college student's main struggle is getting up and actually wearing nice outfits to class every day. It's so easy to dress in leggings, a T-shirt and tennis shoes. Newman said she never leaves the house unless she is somewhat put together. Her words to live by come from her mother and grandmother who taught her that, “No matter how you feel, get up, dress up, and show up.” No matter what kind of mood she is in, she makes sure that her outfit is a reflection of her fashion taste. Even if she is just going to one class, she refuses to leave her house unless she is dressed to impress.

Senior Courtney Matthews refuses to come to class unless she is dressed classy-conservative. Her wardrobe contains a wide variety, from dresses, to blazers, to embellished flats, to heels; Matthew's conquers every day in a new outfit. She is never seen without her sorority tote bag. She never wears less than her best, whether she is going to class, a meeting or just out and about. Her best accessory is her smile. You will never catch Matthews on campus without her famous smile.

Fashion is always changing and evolving. It is open to exploration, imitation and creativity.

Northwestern State University students do not have the luxury of a shopping mall. However, boutiques on Front Street seem never ending. The boutiques embrace the old styles while incorporating the new trends. If today's style had to be summed up, it would be called classy-conservative-modern-retro-chic.

Whether male or female, fashion plays a large part in our every day attitude. When we are dressed for success, we have the attitude to succeed. College is said to be the time to experiment. What better thing to experiment with than fashion? No matter where your day takes you, “wake up, dress up and show up.”

Courtney Matthews and Kelsey Newman modeled their daily styles.

WHAT TO DO IN NATCHITOCHES

a historic experience

By Emily Fontenot

Everyone has heard the saying “College is what you make it”, and by senior year everyone realizes just how true it is. Signing up for classes and choosing a major is only the beginning. To make the most of their four years in Natchitoches, students have to find ways to spice up their lives outside the classroom.

When all else fails, many turn to Wal-Mart. For better or for worse, “wally world” stays filled with college students picking up groceries, making supply runs or just stretching their legs. At all hours of the day and night, students can be sure to run into a classmate, a teacher or maybe even that distractingly attractive lab partner. The sights, sounds, smells and surprises of Wal-Mart continue to draw a loyal crowd.

Some students choose to get a little more creative with their after-school activities. Freshman Melissa Ortiz enjoys bringing her books out to the bank of Cane River to study.

“The sun is setting, and I study, read or do homework,” she said. “It’s really peaceful actually.”

Many students go down to “the docks” on the Red River, where they build bonfires, dip their feet in the lake and enjoy life outside the city limits. A drive down to the docks, a day trip to the Kisatchie National Forest, a movie night, a cookout or a seasonal fiesta make for an exciting change of pace.

Catching up on the latest indie films and having an excuse to share pizza can be just what a student needs to refuel for the week ahead.

For those interested in culture, Natchitoches quickly proves to be a goldmine. As the oldest city in the state, Natchitoches boasts a variety of historic sites, including Fort St. Jean Baptiste and the Minor Basilica of the Immaculate Conception. One of Natchitoches’ newest additions to its repertoire, the Louisiana Sports Hall of Fame & Northwest Louisiana History Museum, hosts a number of exhibitions. The art department also has monthly art exhibits, complete with free food.

Almost every weekend, the City of Natchitoches has something going on down on the riverbank. The Green Market opens in the spring, summer and fall on select Saturdays down Front Street on Cane River. Vendors sell everything from organic fruits, vegetables and salsas to a variety of flowers, plants and homemade goods. The Festival of Lights draws a huge crowd every year, as does the Meat Pie Festival, the Jazz and R&B Festival and the Mardi Gras parade.

When students have some cash to spare, catching a new horror movie at Parkway Cinema, glow bowling at Country Lanes Bowling Center or binging on sushi at Hana Seafood & Hibachi Grill are all popular choices. Junior Cayla Mendow said she started going to bingo on Tuesday nights at Bingo Paradise on Keyser Avenue, which she hopes becomes a student tradition.

“It’s mild gambling, so it gives you a rush,” Mendow said. “People should bring their friends out because the more people who play, the bigger the pot is.”

With such a wide variety of creative venues to explore, the small town of Natchitoches definitely holds its own, even among bigger university towns. Students learn to explore their interests outside the classroom, enriching their college experience and giving them memories that will outlive their short stay here in college.

College life can be very stressful for students when trying to balance class attendance, endless hours of homework, working a job and studying for tests. It is important to keep up with studies, however, sometimes a student just needs to kick back, relax or enjoy a night out to forget all of the stresses of classes.

Natchitoches is a unique city that features a blend of historic culture and southern charm while maintain the perks of a college town brimming with young energy and opportunities for a fun night on the town. There are several clubs and bars that offer something unique to suit students' different preferences. It all depends on the type of atmosphere one prefers.

Several places offer live music throughout the week and weekends. The Pioneer Pub is a restaurant and bar located in downtown Natchitoches. On specific days, one can enjoy entertainment provided by local musicians and bands. They also host open mic nights for those brave enough to show off their singing skills. The Pub is a great spot to hit if one enjoys a more relaxed atmosphere.

"The Pub is my favorite place to go because it is a very chill environment to go and grab a brewski, listen to music and catch up with good people," senior Caleb Strange said.

On the other end of the spectrum, The Body is more suitable for those who like to dance to the hottest music and enjoy an upbeat crowd. Located on the Hwy 1 Bypass, The Body is a club where one can dress up and hit the dance floor. If the crowd gets to be too much, you can head right next door to Antoon's where you can sit, enjoy a drink or play pool.

"Antoon's is always the place I enjoy going. The bartenders are great and remember my friends and I every time. The music is varied and what I like best is there is never any judgment of who you are," senior Brynna Welling said.

Some of the other bars that students frequent are Yesterday's, The Marina and The Cove. While local bars are certainly an option for a night out, some students would rather hang out with friends and have a more intimate get together

"My friends and I like to hang out on these docks at my friend's place where we have bon fires. I definitely prefer hanging with friends over going to the bar," junior Allie Dupree said.

Other options include watching a movie, attending a house party, eating dinner at a favorite restaurant or just kicking back at the house with roommates.

Whatever the kind of night is a student may be looking for, it is always a good idea to cut loose and forget about the stress and work load that might be waiting... at least for a little while. For a college student, it is all about maintaining that delicate balance between work and fun.

CHEERS TO 21

finally legal

You've carried a fake I.D. into the bar, you've waited inconspicuously in the shadows as your older friends bought you a drink and you've snuck into clubs to see your favorite band, but all this comes to an end on the glorious day a student turns 21. You are no longer dancing on the edge of teenagehood and adulthood. Now you're well on your way to being a full grown adult. To celebrate this rite of passage, students may choose to indulge on the perks of their newfound privilege.

Junior Alexia Mullally celebrated her birthday by taking a trip to the casino. According to Mullally, her mother went a day early so she could decorate the room before Mullally and her friends arrived.

"We had such a blast eating at the casino, drinking champagne and playing the slot machines," Mullally said.

She also enjoyed a cake that was uniquely decorated in a 21 birthday theme. It featured a drunken Barbie doll sitting next to several bottles of liquor.

Some people may come to realize now that they can finally show their I.D. with confidence, their attitude could have gotten them by all along. For junior Kelsey Newman, the excitement of ordering a drink and showing her I.D. didn't go as planned.

"My husband, who is older, took me out to The Pub on my birthday and when we both ordered drinks, he got carded and I didn't. It was completely bizarre and hilarious. I guess by not being worried about getting turned down, I seemed more calm and collected," Newman said.

Senior Taylor Legrand spent her birthday weekend at one of the biggest parties of the summer. She and a group of her friends attended Bonnaroo, where she was able to see live music and party with 30,000 other festival goers. Her birthday was on the last day of the festival. Legrand described the experience as unforgettable.

"My favorite memory of the whole day was during the Wiz Khalifa set, when my friend let me get up on his shoulders during my favorite song so I could see everything," Legrand said.

Of course, drinking is not everyone's thing and one's 21st birthday is a special time in many other ways. The life of a twenty something is full of transitional moments, new responsibilities and exploring oneself and the world. It is a time to be free and take advantage of life without many commitments. One may or may not remember the night they turned 21, but one thing is for certain, it is an exciting time to be alive.

CHRISTMAS FEST

a celebration like no other

By Emily Fontenot
Photography: Emily Fontenot

Natchitoches does Christmas like New Orleans does Mardi Gras and the town fills with visitors in the holiday season more than any other time of the year. People from around the world come to see downtown Natchitoches light up at night, and students desert campus once the day of the festival rolls around.

Natchitoches opens the season with the Christmas Festival of Lights along Front Street, with a huge parade, live music, a variety of vendors and a nationally ranked light show. The display ranks third only to New York City and Disney World, according to a list made by yahoo.com.

This year was no exception, and many students enjoyed the day by honoring the long-standing tradition of Christmas on the Hill at the Kappa Alpha house, an event that takes advantage of the fraternity's convenient location for students to watch the light show and enjoy the downtown attractions.

Junior English major Meredith Prochaska enjoyed her third Christmas Festival by visiting the different booths, eating gumbo from Lasyone's and watching the parade from the Kappa Alpha house.

"It was really neat because there was such a wide variety of students there and we were all able to hang out together," Prochaska said about Christmas on the Hill. "I didn't get to stay late because I had work, but I really enjoyed watching the parade and getting in the Christmas spirit with some of my closest friends."

Many students with jobs at businesses along Front Street spent the busiest day of the year channeling tourists through their doors and trying to keep the lines down. Senior biology major Dustin Hadley said his experience working at Cane Brake Café was both rewarding and challenging.

"It was a mixture of excitement and anxiousness of the unknown chaos that is Natchitoches at Christmas," Hadley said. "It's also encouraging to see something so big be very family and Christmas spirit oriented."

Junior music education major Jorge Alarcon said that although battling the crowds was a hassle at times, experiencing the energy of Natchitoches at Christmas was worth it in the end.

"I realized how hectic it was trying to drive through town at any time of that day, and I was going crazy especially with the people that can't drive," Alarcon said. "But my day ended well, and I got to watch the fire works downtown with my beautiful sisters, where I had alligator for the very first time."

Freshman Htet Htet Rodgers, a liberal arts major with a concentration in scientific inquiry in the Louisiana Scholars' College, has experienced the festival many times before and has different memories of the festival than those whose only experiences of Natchitoches at Christmas have been as college students.

"The festival for me is a time when my family comes around," Rodgers said. "Everyone who has moved away comes in for the reunion at my uncle's house, and we always have a blast. Christmas Festival became a tradition for my family to reminisce on the good memories and to make some new ones."

However the students of Northwestern State University chose to spend their day, the energy and excitement of Christmas Fest is sure to leave its mark on their college experience, bringing them together with the community of Natchitoches and each other.

The orchestra led a sing-a-long during the 2014 Christmas Gala.

The 26th annual Northwestern Christmas Gala was the culmination of months of rehearsals from students in Northwestern's CAPA department. The Gala is the sole performance where theatre and music students come together to provide a showcase for the Christmas season.

Audiences have continually been delighted by the Christmas Gala, which is a show that is meant to get audiences into the holiday spirit. Although you would never know by the quality of the performances and the bright faces on stage, Gala week is a demanding time for CAPA students who perform in nine shows over a three-day period. The Gala opened near the end of the semester, meaning that in addition to performing, the students also had to study for final exams.

Freshman theatre major Savannah Cantwell dressed the part of Elsa from Frozen to greet children at the entrance to the AA Fredrick's auditorium. As she quickly touched up her makeup backstage to get ready for the second morning show, she talked about how she balances school work and performances during Gala week.

"I actually got a couple hours of sleep last night so that is why I'm in such a good mood," Cantwell said laughing.

Dillon Dewitt performed for his second year in a row at this year's Gala. Dewitt's favorite part of performing is watching the children's reactions.

"The morning shows are invigorating to perform because the kids are so enthusiastic," Dewitt said.

When performing live, students can expect things to go wrong sometimes. A mishap during one of the morning shows was a main topic of discussion amongst students backstage. Orchestra performers Casie Ford and Daniella Angulo giggled as they explained what happened.

"The curtain didn't rise all the way for the finale and the lights didn't come on so all of us in the orchestra pit were trying to use our tiny hand held lights to create a spotlight for Santa," Angulo said.

This was Ford's third year to perform in Gala. She explained that while the rehearsal process is long and exhausting, what makes it all worth it is performing for all of the people who travel from all over to watch the show and being a part of a production that involves everyone in CAPA.

"It is a great experience for me. My whole family comes to watch so I get really excited about that," Ford said.

This year's Gala, directed by Patrick Dill, brought back audience favorites such as The Parade of the Wooden Soldiers, Rockettes and The Percussion Ensemble. Performance groups featured in Gala included The Northwestern Symphony-Orchestra, The NSU Choirs, NSU Department of Theatre and Dance, The NSU Jazz Orchestra, Demon Dazzlers, NSU Percussion Ensemble, and the Out-on-a-Limb improv troupe. Video and visual art was provided by Northwestern State Department of Fine and Graphic Arts.

Taylor Walker wowed the crowd and the judges with her poise and grace in every part of the pageant. She was delighted to be crowned Miss Northwestern Lady of the Bracelet.

Taylor Walker from Shreveport, Louisiana, was crowned as the 57th Miss Walker represented Northwestern at the Miss Louisiana pageant held later in the year.

The Miss Northwestern Lady of the Bracelet, more commonly referred to as LOB, has a long standing tradition in NSU culture and continues to draw large crowds from all across Louisiana to observe this unique and elegant showcase. The scholarship pageant is affiliated with Miss America and serves to promote beauty in all aspects of life. The program is coordinated each year by the Student Activities Board under the leadership of Yonna Pasch.

Miss LOB chairwoman 2015 Alexis Reliford along with the SAB, were able to showcase beauty of various aspects in the multi-faceted event. The pageant aims to provide women of Northwestern with an opportunity to display their talents and beauty.

LOB was originally sponsored by the Potpourri yearbook staff and the original pageant set the stage for what was to come. The first Lady of the Bracelet, Kahne Dipola, was crowned in 1958, and the event was commemorated by the gift of a golden bracelet to be worn in public as a symbol of her commitment and love for Northwestern. The tradition continues to this day and a new charm is added to the bracelet each year.

The seven contestants competed in several events during the pageant. The categories included swimsuits, on-stage questions, talent and evening gown. The judges scored on poise, performance and overall stage presence. Walker wowed the judges with her inspirational dance set to Martin Luther King Jr.'s "I Have a Dream" speech. Marissa McMickens sang to the hearts of the judges as well as the audience, and this earned her the Top Talent award and also People's Choice for the evening.

Walker is a junior psychology and theater major and is actively involved on Northwestern's campus. She is an active member of the AOπ Sorority and would like to thank her family and sorority sisters for their unwavering support.

Faith Stanfield was first runner up and Marissa McMickens earned second runner up. The pageant was also filled with various student showcases in song and dance which provided entertainment throughout the show. The overwhelming crowd favorite was the student a cappella group which wowed the audience with their vocal superiority and dazzling arrangement of Katy Perry chart toppers.

This year's Lady of the Bracelet was definitely one for the books and as always, the ladies showed up in full fashion. The unofficial slogan of the pageant still holds truth, "A woman wears a crown, but only a lady can wear the bracelet."

ROAD TO MISS LOUISIANA

race for the crown

By Jessie Gabor

Photography: submitted by Tori Thompson

Northwestern State University sent four women to the Miss Louisiana 2014 pageant held in Monroe to compete for the crown. Breanna Collier, Miss Natchitoches; Taylor Layman, the 2014 Northwestern Lady of the Bracelet; Tori Thompson, Miss Holiday in Dixie; and Taylor Walker, Miss Louisiana Delta; represented NSU in Monroe.

Tori Thompson was honored to receive fourth alternate in the pageant.

Q: Which pageant did you win to qualify for the Miss Louisiana pageant?

T: I represented the title of Miss Holiday in Dixie 2014. Holiday in Dixie is a festival that takes place in Shreveport every year.

Q: What was your platform during the competition and why did you choose this?

T: My platform is called "Make a Friend, Make a Change, Make an Impact" and I developed it for students in elementary, middle and high school to educate them on forms of bullying and how to end the cycle starting with their own actions. We discuss ways to be kind, tolerant and understanding toward one another and how change starts within ourselves. I developed this platform because I experienced bullying in high school and I want young students to know that they are not alone. They can stop the cycle by communicating effectively and positively.

Q: What was your talent?

T: I played the piano and performed "Dance of Fire" by Bruce Tippet.

Q: What was the most difficult part of the pageant to prepare for?

T: The part that was the most challenging to prepare for, but the most rewarding, was the fitness phase of competition. There is definitely pressure when preparing to walk across the stage in a bikini and 5-inch heels in front of the whole state of Louisiana. I learned a lot about myself and also how to live a healthy lifestyle.

Q: Did you do any kind of charity work for the Miss Louisiana organization?

T: One of the most important aspects of the Miss Louisiana Organization is the emphasis on community service and being civil servants. I had the opportunity to work with multiple organizations in Natchitoches like Hope for Paws and the Boys and Girls Club. It was one of my favorite parts of being a titleholder. The official philanthropy of the Miss America Organization is Children's Miracle Network Hospitals, and I have held multiple fundraisers to raise money and awareness for this wonderful organization that provides medical care for children in need.

Q: How long did it take you to prepare for the pageant?

T: This was my third year to compete at Miss Louisiana, and I have learned that you can never start preparing too early! My preparation began after taking some time to regroup after Miss Louisiana last summer, and then I hit the ground running to prepare for my local pageant.

Q: What was your first pageant and how long have you been doing pageants?

T: My very first local pageant to qualify for Miss Louisiana was my freshman year when I was crowned Miss Northwestern Lady of the Bracelet. I enjoyed Miss Louisiana so much and was fortunate enough to make the top 10 my very first time competing. I've been hooked ever since. The experience is something I will always carry with me. I have learned so much throughout my time competing.

Q: What title did you win during the pageant?

T: I placed in the top five out of 32 contestants and received fourth runner up! It was very exciting and I was so honored to be able to successfully represent Northwestern State University on the Miss Louisiana stage.

fun in the sun

By Emily Fontenot

Banana boat sunscreen, sandy hair and procrastination—the ideal spring break vacation, right? Although for many college students a week spent in Panama City remains the traditional right-of-passage to adulthood, the students at Northwestern State got a little more creative this year in choosing their spring break destinations.

There were those on a budget; no money usually equals a week of self-pity, potato chips and Netflix binging. Sophomore Chelsea Thibodeaux and four of her friends decided to break the trend and spend their spring break visiting each other's houses instead.

Thibodeaux and sophomores Caitlyn Daigle, John Nance, Nicholas Bailey and David Brocato boiled seafood, watched movies, went boating and spent time relaxing at each of their houses.

"It was really fun," Thibodeaux said. "Right before spring break, we all had a bunch of papers and tests and were really broke. We couldn't do a big trip, but we all wanted to stay together."

Then there were those who went home for spring break but probably had a better time than their bikini-clad counterparts. Senior James Leach spent his week of rejuvenation before finals doing what he loves: crewing for hot air balloon pilots.

Leach started crewing two years ago after volunteering to help out a friend. He crewed over the summer for pilot Johnny Petrehn during nationals, where his team won first place. Crewing consists of preparing the balloons and driving the chase vehicle for the pilot. Leach said he was glad he spent his spring break productively.

"It's a lot more fun getting up at 5 a.m. and hanging out with a great group of people than sleeping 'til 1 in the afternoon," he said.

There were those, like senior Payton Veuleman, who took advantage of the spring season and got in touch with their adventurous side. Veuleman and fellow senior Daniel Thiels spent the week camping in Arkansas.

They spent the first two days camping at DeGray Lake, where it thunderstormed each night. After camping, they went hiking and canoeing at the Gulf of Gorge and hiked through a mountain to Hot Springs.

"It was a great time," Veuleman said. "There's nothing like camping during a thunderstorm."

Then there were those who got offered jobs in the Dominican Republic as male acrobatic Go-go dancers. Okay, maybe just that one guy, but his experience can speak for countless college students whose breaks took unexpected turns for the better or worse, or in his case, the bizarre.

During a family vacation in the Dominican Republic, sophomore Logan Terrell went down to a nightclub on his resort looking to befriend some fellow vacationers. Spotting a fellow acrobat, Terrell decided to introduce himself.

After the two compared skills, Terrell found he could do more tricks than the professional. The man then proceeded to chase him around with a prop champagne bottle, sparking an unwanted game of cat and mouse. The manager, who had watched the scene unfold, offered Terrell the acrobat's job on the spot.

"I actually thought about not leaving," Terrell said. He said he got to do some acrobatic dancing that night and that he had a lot of fun.

Whether students spent their week sun-tanning in Panama City, flying hot-air balloons, house-hopping, couch-sitting or Go-go dancing, the spring break vacations of 2014 were as diverse as the students who took them and certainly just as unforgettable.

SUMMER BREAK

summer in jamaica

“I would recommend everyone leave their country of origin at least once in their life.”

Most students spend their summer working, spending time with their family or going to summer school. Not sophomore vocal music education major Kaitlyn Connors. Missionaries from Louisiana, Ohio, Maryland and North Carolina got together last summer to travel to Jamaica in hopes of helping the locals spiritually. Connors had the opportunity to join them.

“My hometown church, Leesville First Assembly of God, had a group traveling to Jamaica for missions, something I am very passionate about,” Connors said. “I was so excited about the trip because I not only got to build relationships with the Jamaican people, but also people from around the United States.”

Connors spent much of her time in Jamaica visiting Hope Hospice, West Haven Home for Disabled Children and Blossom Gardens Orphanage. The mission was sponsored by the organization Friends Forever, started by Dr. Mark Muirhead. The Friends Forever organization has worked to establish cable stations to connect to Jamaicans.

“Every day that we were in Jamaica, we were busy meeting and getting to know people of all ages, social classes and states of health,” Connors said. “My group was located in Flankers, a very poor and violent neighborhood just outside of the tourist town, Montego Bay. Our main focus was to love these people the way God does: freely and selflessly.”

When asked if she would recommend others to visit Jamaica, she responded quickly.

“I would recommend everyone leave their country of origin at least once in their life,” Connors said. “Jamaica is a stunning island with beautiful people and it’s definitely worth a visit.”

Connors plans on returning to Jamaica in the future for another mission trip.

“The entire trip was life changing. Seeing so many Jamaicans open their hearts to God and experience love was one of the most amazing things I’ve ever witnessed,” Connors said. “The Jamaican people captured a bit of my heart and gave me an unforgettable summer. I can’t wait to go back.”

SUMMER INTERNSHIPS AND RESEARCH PROJECTS

putting knowledge to the test

By spring, the question of how to spend summer vacation is fresh on every student's mind. Some choose to work, play or dive back into the books, but a growing group of students choose to spend their summer breaks as interns.

The past few years have brought a high demand among employers for graduates who have completed one or more internships.

While the term "intern" has in years past been synonymous with "coffee-runner," conditions seem to be improving for this group of career-minded students.

With the increase in internship availability across the nation, employers have to be competitive to attract students to their programs. Students are forewarned about being taken advantage of, and they are looking for an internship that will not only look impressive on a résumé, but also provide them with a meaningful experience.

Senior mass communication major Kyla Winey interned at Rep. Vance McAllister's office last summer.

"It is something that I will never forget and I was blessed to be a part of," she said.

Winey researched bills and attended committee meetings. Halfway through her internship, she was hired on as McAllister's full-time scheduler, enabling her to attend many staff-only events. She was also able to experience the border control crisis as it made its impact on Capitol Hill.

Senior Megan Duhon, a liberal arts major with a concentration in scientific inquiry, chose to spend 10 weeks of her summer break interning at the Louisiana State University Health Sciences Center in Shreveport. She was paired with a lab mentor and given a research project to tackle before the annual Summer Undergraduate Research Forum in Baton Rouge, where she presented her research at the end of the internship.

"I absolutely loved my experience," Duhon said. "I actually cried when I had to tell my lab and the people in it goodbye. I still keep in touch with my lab mentor."

She said she never felt mistreated or taken advantage of but that, rather, she was pushed to perform highly and develop her skills throughout the internship. The internship paid well, provided housing and proved to be well worth her time.

Junior Crystal Dunning, a liberal arts major with a concentration in fine and performing arts, spent her summer experiencing a new environment far from her hometown in Lafayette. Dunning travelled to Interlochen, Mich., for her summer break to intern at the Interlochen Center for the Arts.

"I had a great experience," she said. "It was amazing. I had a chance to meet and work with so many wonderful professionals."

Dunning said she wanted to gain experience in arts administration and, after searching for different internships across the country, found this unique opportunity to work in event planning and management. While she was paid and many of the other interns were not, she said they all felt the experience was worth their effort with or without the money.

Today, college students are racking up two or three internships by the time graduation rolls around. The hands-on experience they provide makes them widely popular among students at Northwestern State University and others across the nation.

Most Northwestern State Demons lived less than a few hours away from the campus when they chose to attend school. There are a few students, however, who decided that they would explore different parts of the country by studying at universities that offered such programs. Students who participate in the International Student Exchange Program (ISEP) can choose to study at an international university at the same cost as a semester at NSU. Various students have decided to study at the University of Vigo in Spain, University of Ulster in Northern Ireland and University of Roehampton in London, England. This program allows the students to explore different cultures and different learning environments in countries all around the world. The program is directed at NSU by Dr. Keith Dromm, associate professor of philosophy, Louisiana Scholars' College, who takes great pride in knowing students are learning in new atmospheres and environments.

Dromm is responsible for seeing that all of the students are taken care of in their studies.

Not all students choose to study abroad; some students elect to study within the country. The National Student Exchange (NSE) is domestic exchange program with over 180 campuses. Students can study almost anywhere in the United States and some U.S. territories for up to one year. Cheryl Garrett, NSE participant from the Louisiana Scholars' College, is studying at University of Massachusetts where she is not only enjoying the academics of the college, but also the new environment of New England.

"The enjoyment I am getting from driving around looking at the fall foliage and going to see places such as the home of Emily Dickenson and Walden Pond where Thoreau lived is tremendous,” said Garrett. “Everywhere I look there is a sense of history.”

All of the students contacted shared the fact that the directors of the program always ensure that their needs are met and that they never have to worry about the technical details. They are there to learn and enjoy their environment.

DEMON FEST

good vibe & good times

Peanut Butter Lovesicle and headliner Of Montreal took the stage for Demon Fest 2014.

NSU's music festival, organized by the KNWD campus radio staff, was a two-day event that brought students together to create an atmosphere of good vibes and great live music. The second annual Demon Fest took place last March on the Iberville field. Students and Natchitoches residents came out to enjoy a weekend of outdoor festivities and music. Two stages were set up featuring a range of local bands and student acts as well as nationally recognized bands. The headliner, Of Montreal, is a nationally renowned group that has played multiple festivals across the country.

"When I was presented with a list of bands that were within our budget, I saw Of Montreal and I thought, there's no question; we have to get them," KNWD General Manager Daniel Thiels said.

A few other bands that were featured at the festival include:

Peanut Butter Lovesicle, England in 1819, Sea Wolf Mutiny, and Shreveport natives, Engine. The kind of planning that goes into organizing an event like this is rather extensive, according to KNWD Musical Director Paxton Britt.

"Planning started for Demon Fest within the first two weeks of the fall semester. The first thing we did was create the logo and it went from there," Britt said.

Many students who were not involved directly with the staff worked as volunteers to help make the festival run smoothly. They helped in painting banners for the stages, making and putting up fliers, stage managing, working the ticket booth and working vendor tables.

The festival kicked off Friday night with a DJ booth and activities set up to get everyone pumped for the next day. Saturday showcased student artists, as well as a number of bands throughout the day and closed with Of Montreal.

Thiels explained that the staff is working to make Demon Fest bigger and better every year.

"I think the music scene in Natchitoches and on campus has the potential to grow. I really hope that these festivals turn into a tradition that grows and grows," Thiels said.

The unique thing about KNWD and their shows is that students get to experience an intimate setting, while seeing all types of performers. From rock to punk, hip-hop to reggae, KNWD has it all. Students can listen to KNWD by tuning into 91.7 FM. However, to get the full effect of what this station has to offer, one should attend the festivals and shows hosted right here on NSU's campus.

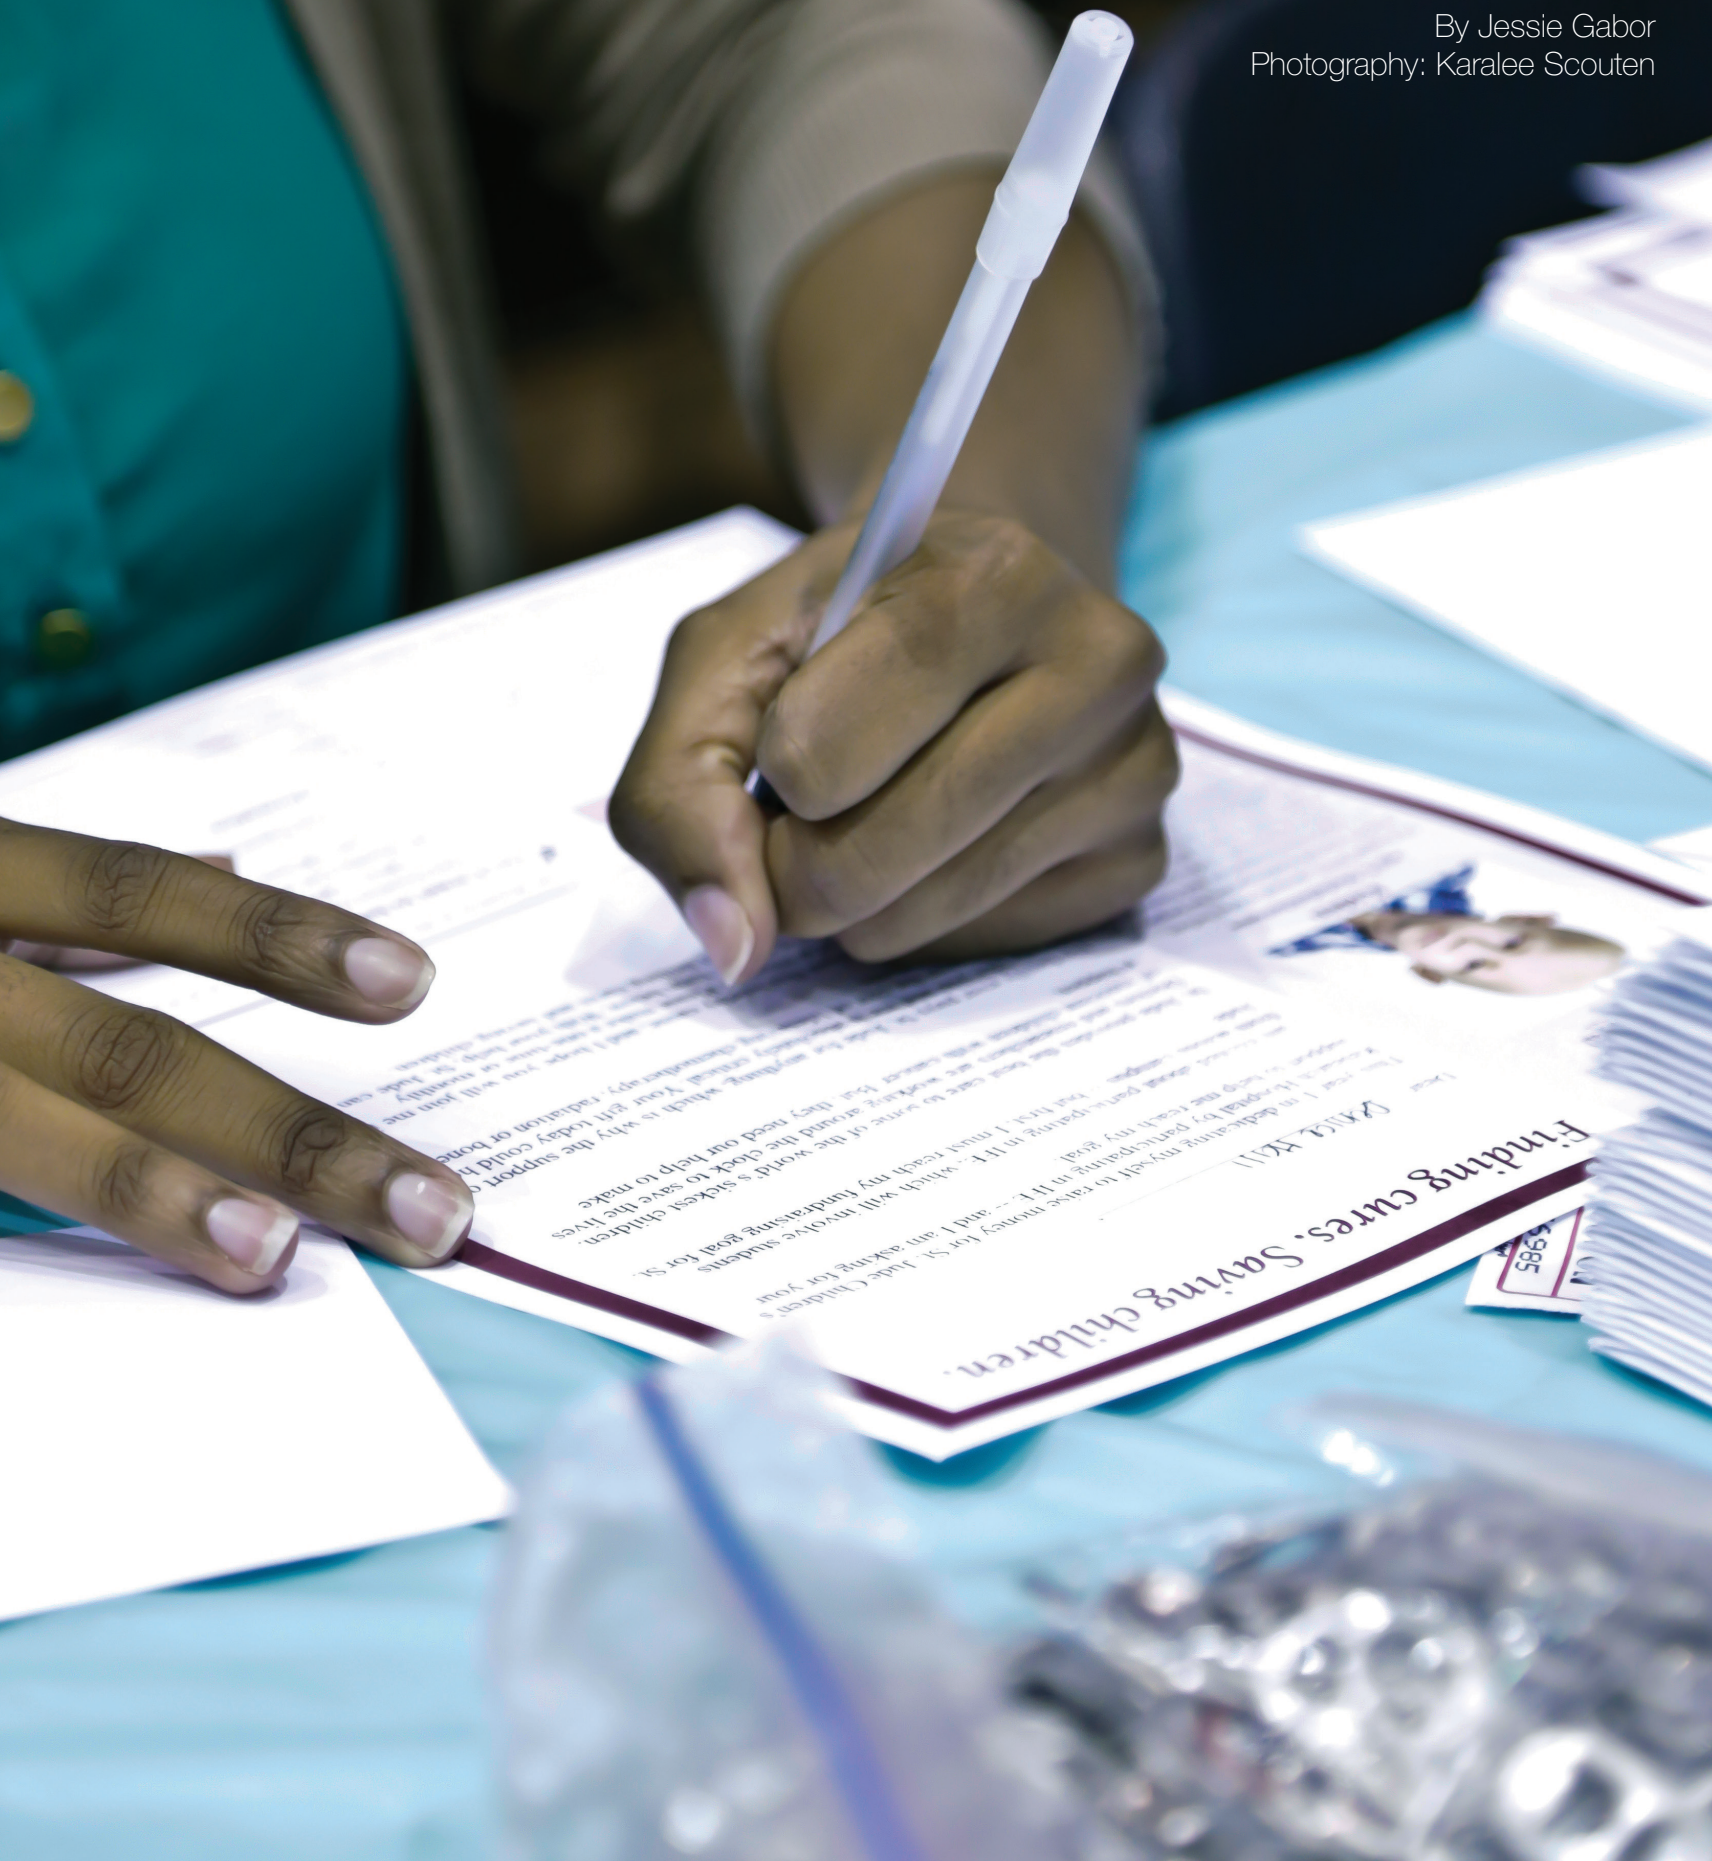

The station is located on the first floor of Kyser Hall where the radio's staff of student employees work many hours each week with the goal to serve as an excellent source of media for the students.

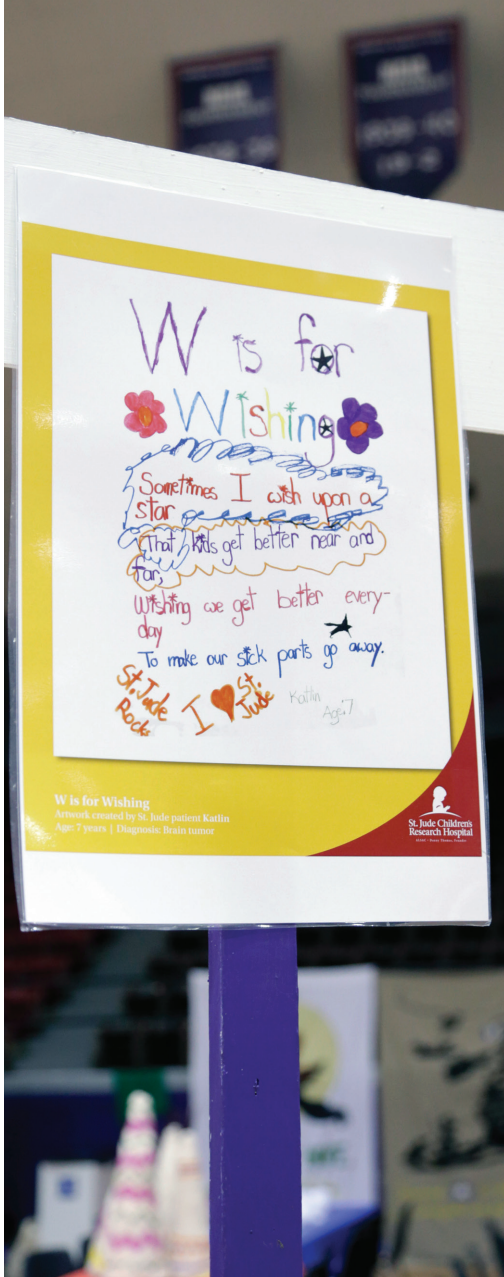

UNITE TO FIGHT

letter-writing for a cause

Previously known as Up til' Dawn, Unite to Fight is a fundraising organization for St. Jude Children's Research Hospital. Unite to Fight has been on campus for seven years and currently is the largest fundraising event, raising over $100,000 for St. Jude in the past five years.

"We typically hold two smaller events called 'Awareness Week' in both the fall and spring to make the students at NSU aware of who we are and why we are on campus," said junior logistics chairperson of Unite to Fight, Katelon Ramos. "Awareness weeks consist of fundraisers at Raising Cane's and Chili's, where a certain percentage of the total for the evening goes to St. Jude. We also do Chunk Your Change events where volunteers, executive board members and SAB members stand at the Caspari stoplight corners and collect change from passerbys."

This year Unite to Fight held separate letter-writing events. Students were asked to write at least 25 letters to family, friends, etc. and mail the letters out in hopes of raising money for St. Jude.

"Writing these letters helps us get the bulk of the money we raise and allows for Unite to Fight as a whole to raise more money for St. Jude," Ramos said.

Each spring, Unite to Fight holds a large event on campus. The student body voted on a Harry Potter theme for the event. During the spring event, Unite to Fight provides food, games and a station for participants to write well wishes to patients at St. Jude. Patients from St. Jude are welcomed to the event to tell their stories.

"We want the event to be enjoyable, but we also want it to be a time where the students can learn about childhood cancer," Ramos said. "We want students to be able to see why we put so much effort and emphasis on raising money for this hospital."

Although the organization has a new name, the same purpose and drive the organization prides itself on remain.

Top right: Paxton Britt took the stage at UTF, providing entertainment to letter-writers. Bottom right: SAB volunteers Kaymin Carter and Jasie Eubanks worked the candy table at UTF.

STUDENT VOLUNTEERS

making NSU and Natchitoches beautiful

Community service may be seen as just a part of required credit hours for some, but for others it is a way of life. Northwestern State University offers many options for students to make an impact on campus and in the community.

One of the ways students get involved on campus is through events and fundraisers. Not only are these a way to better the community, they are also a great way to meet people and take part in something bigger than yourself.

There are many opportunities to be a volunteer, whether it is through a club or just looking for a way to take part on campus. Most organizations on campus require their members to do some form of community service. Student Activities Board (SAB), Presidential Leadership Program (PLP), Circle K International, Demon VIP, and Helping Hands are a few of the volunteer programs that NSU offers. Demon VIP or (Volunteers in Progress) is a program where students help with Freshman Connection and Move-In Day. These students have a huge impact on incoming freshman, as they are some of the first people that students will meet upon starting school. Demon VIP and Freshman Connectors are there to help ease students in their transition from high school to college. Circle K International is a sponsored collegiate leadership program of Kiwanis. It promotes service, leadership and fellowship.

Greek organizations each have their own unique traditions and community service projects. Phi Mu Fraternity is known for their annual fundraiser, Vera Bradley Bingo. The event started in the fall of 2010 and is a continued effort to raise money for Children's Miracle Network.

Senior Julia Barry is a member of Phi Mu and SAB. Many students are involved in more than one organization on campus that requires them to complete community service hours.

Students donate hours of their time to event planning and service hours, but they wouldn't have it any other way. Some of them plan to continue to take part in volunteer programs after they graduate.

"This semester I've worked at the Robeline Food Pantry and Hope for Paws. I've always volunteered for as long as I can remember because my parents encouraged me. For me, it is not a choice, but a lifestyle," Barry said.

Doing the smallest of things can make a huge impact on someone else. As a member of Phi Mu and Demon VIP, junior Sarah Evans has had the opportunity to help the less fortunate by working at Robeline Food Pantry and Cane River Children's Services.

"I feel blessed to be able to donate my time to helping the community. I do things like playing kickball with girls who don't have a home. I hope to travel and do mission work in the future to help underprivileged families and children in America and other countries," Evans said.

These students are a prime example of creating the difference they want to see in the world. Even through small, simple tasks, these students are changing their community and world one step at a time.

Junior Sarah Evans participated in Phi Mu's monthly road clean-up on campus.

history made

By Kathleen Barkley
Photography: Gary Hardamon

If you are a sports fan or, more importantly, a Northwestern State University Demon fan, you know that the title of ‘Southland Conference Champion’ is the most important title of the season.

The Southland Conference was established in 1963. It is associated with the NCAA. The Southland Conference is currently in Division I. The conference contains schools from Texas, Louisiana and Arkansas. Teams that are currently included in the Southland Conference include: Abilene Christian University, University of Central Arkansas, Houston Baptist University, University of the Incarnate Word, Lamar University, McNeese State University, University of New Orleans, Nicholls State University, Sam Houston State University, Southeastern Louisiana University, Stephen F. Austin State University, Texas A&M University—Corpus Christi and, of course, Northwestern State University. The Southland Conference includes 18 college and university all-sport programs. Each team in the conference has one common goal: to be the reigning Southland Conference Champion.

Teams to win the Southland Conference in the 2014 season were Lady Demons Basketball, Lady Demons Softball and Lady Demons Volleyball. All of these teams put in countless hours of practice to get their titles.

Past Southland Conference titles are important to players. The motivation of knowing a past team at their university won the title in the past helps the players have hope that they too can earn the title. In 2004, the NSU women’s basketball team earned the title for the first time. The 2014 women’s basketball team began their season with the determination to earn another conference title. They played and they didn’t quit until they reached their goal. The 2014 Lady Demon basketball team accomplished their goal, and earned the school their second Southland Conference title in 10 years.

Every sports fan knows that being the champion of anything is an accomplishment. Since winning the conference title, students at NSU have flooded the teams with love and support for their next season, hoping for another title in the future.

Football season is a time for students to kick back and relax on Saturday and forget about the stress of homework and classes. The way most students choose to relax on home game days is with a tailgate and Demon football.

Tailgating on NSU's campus is spread all across the sports complex, and with fraternity and Alumni Association locations, there's always somewhere to go for a bite to eat and game of cornhole to pump up the crowd.

Freshman HMT major Brook Stanley enjoys tailgating because it makes the game afterward more fun.

"Everyone gets very excited and hyped up during tailgate and it shows during the games," said Stanley. "Tailgating makes the game more enjoyable for me because I get to spend more time with my Phi Mu sisters, and bonding over football is pretty fun."

For Stanley, the Wreck Tech tailgate in September was the best tailgate of the season.

"So many people were there supporting NSU, and there was more of a unity between different organizations and alumni," said Stanley.

The NSU Alumni Association sold student tailgate tickets for $25 that included drinks, food and entertainment at the NSU tailgate, a ticket to the game, T-shirt and bus ride to Ruston and back.

In addition to the Wreck Tech tailgate in Ruston, the Alumni Association also tailgates for every home game at the Collins Family Pavilion. Anyone can join the tailgate for $5 per game, and Alumni Association members get to tailgate for free.

Tailgating at NSU may seem small compared to larger schools, but it offers something that can't be found on any other college campus. The camaraderie and atmosphere in Natchitoches cannot be recreated and it's a great way to kick off football at Turpin Stadium.

It had been 20 years since Northwestern State University's football team matched up against Louisiana Tech. The renewed rivalry is one of the longest standing rivalries in college football. It all began in 1907. This game marked the 78th time the Demons and Bulldogs had gone head to head.

The whole week leading to the game, Demons were told stories, shown videos and heard testimonials of former players and Demon fanatics about the rich history of the "Wreck Tech" game.

In previous years, this game was a state affair. NSU would close down the campus on Fridays so the faculty and students could make the trip to Shreveport for the "Rally in the Alley." The Rally in the Alley was a huge parade, which featured Bulldog and Demon bands, cheer squads and both teams parading down the streets of downtown Shreveport.

In front of 26,000 fans at Joe Aillet Stadium, the Demons pulled off a miraculous upset with a 30-27 win over the Bulldogs. The Demons had a 20-point fourth quarter, which was capped by junior kicker Chris Moore and his 47-yard game winning field goal. The field goal won the game for the Demons, but they would not have been in that position if it were not for their resilient defense.

Marion Chapman recovered a fumble with less than 3 minutes remaining that led to the game tying field goal. On the first play after the kick off, the Bulldogs ran a pass play that was deflected by Imoan Claiborne. Adam Jones made a clutch diving interception to give the Demons the ball on their own 49-yard line with 52 seconds remaining.

Senior quarterback Zach Adkins made two consecutive passes to Cody Jones before taking a 4-yard loss to move the ball to the middle of the field with 3 seconds remaining. The Bulldogs called a timeout to try to freeze the offense and kicker Chris Moore. That would not be enough as Moore bombed the kick through the uprights as time expired. The strong NSU cheering section erupted long past the game's end, celebrating with the Demon players and watching Bulldogs fans rush out of the stadium.

The win caps the first for Northwestern State over an FBS opponent since 2005, ending a 17-game drought in those matchups. This was the first win over the Bulldogs since their 25-21 victory in 1979.

Three Demons received three Southland honors, two state accolades and a national honor after the upset. Adam Jones was one of five players named College Sporting News FCS All-Stars, and was voted the Southland and Louisiana Sports Writers Association Defensive Player of the Week. Chris Moore notched Southland and LSWA Special Teams Player of the Week and Garrett Atzenweiler, after scoring two touchdowns and running for 66 yards, was named Southland's Offensive Player of the Week.

The Demons headed to face their rivals, Stephen F. Austin, with a solid 6-5 record. Not only were the Demons playing for the largest trophy in college football: Chief Caddo, but they were playing for a spot in the NCAA football playoffs. The Demons hadn't been to the playoffs since 2005. The dream was crushed when Stephen F. Austin kicker Jordan Wiggs kicked a 41-yard field goal as time expired. SFA would end up winning 27-24.

The Chief Caddo trophy is the largest trophy in the history of the NCAA. The solid wooden chief stands at 7-feet 5-inches and weighs 330 pounds. Although Chief Caddo will not be returning to NSU for the next year, the Demons were able to post a 29-12-2 record in the 50 times NSU and SFA have gone to battle.

Northwestern State sophomore safety Adam Jones intercepted the ball at the Stephen F. Austin 46-yardline. With the game tied and 26 seconds left, the interception would seem to be the play of the year. After rolling on the ground for several seconds, Jones would look up and realize that the back judge threw a late flag and called pass interference on Jones. The controversial call ended the Demons' hopes of making the playoffs.

Humbled and composed when asked about the play, Jones said that he thought it was a tough break. Second year head coach Jay Thomas gave praise to his team, speaking about their resiliency and the how the team did not want to give up during the game.

The NSU football program has had great success with the arrival of Thomas and his staff. According to Thomas, the program is headed in the right direction. This season was only mere plays away from an eight or nine win season. The loss put the Demons at 6-6 for the season. This is the first time since the 2003-2004 season that the Demons posted a .500 record or better in a two-year span.

OVERALL RECORD 6-6

It was a rollercoaster season for the Demon football program. With many highs and lows, they played every game to the best of their abilities.

From breaking multiple records, to winning close games against top ranked opponents like Louisiana Tech and Sam Houston State, the Demons managed to keep the spark. They finished at 6-6 in overall play for the second consecutive year, while going 4-4 in Southland Conference play.

“Wreck Tech” is perhaps the most famous pair of words that will carry on for the next couple years, as the Demons did just that. The Demons started their season in Ruston with a huge chip on their shoulder visiting old time rival, Louisiana Tech.

“We went into the fourth quarter with confidence because we knew they were scared,” linebacker Christian Van Buren said. “We were a little nervous, but we didn’t show it.”

The Demons left Tech in awe as they got in good field position to kick a 47-yard, game-winning field goal. The Demons prided themselves on their Purple Swarm defense, one that had carried them throughout the season fighting every battle.

According to Van Buren, the Purple Swarm is “just a mindset” that the Demons have. It’s based around them swarming to the ball aggressively every play.

“We play with speed, tenacity, strength and toughness. We also play every down till the echo of the second whistle to make sure we get to the ball,” Van Buren said.

Offensively, the Demons managed to end the season strong, having multiple players break multiple records. Quarterback Zach Adkins left his mark at NSU, as he ended his career ranked in the top 10 in three National Collegiate Athletic Association stats and top 25 among the 119 Football Championship Subdivision teams in eight categories.

“Our quarterback was a big part of our offense. He helped carry us and will be missed for next season,” wide receiver Shakeir Ryan said.

Ryan hopes that next season will be even better as he awaits the transition of a new quarterback to lead the offense. With many goals in mind, both Ryan and Van Buren say a stronger brotherhood in the off-season will account for more victories in the fall.

OVERALL RECORD 17-14

Ending the 2013-2014 season with a bang, the Demon men's basketball team went out by winning the last 12 of their 15 games, securing the Southland Conference title, earning themselves a first round bye in the tournament.

"We had a more rewarding season, but we didn't finish as strong as we hoped," said Demon Head Coach Mike McConathy.

The Demons ended their 2013-14 season 17-14, going 12-6 in conference play.

"I will definitely miss this senior group. I felt as if we became the best of friends and we competed as a whole," said sophomore guard Jalan West.

West, earning a spot on the 30-man Lou Henson Mid-Major All-America Team, was also recognized for his performance by earning First Team All-Conference and Defensive Player of the Year in the SLC.

"I think the highlight of my season was when we played Auburn early in the year. We were down by 14, but we managed to do a 30 point turnaround and win by 19," said West. "My teammates found me and I scored points. I felt we played great as a whole."

Taking a month off due to a knee injury, senior guard Gary Stewart still managed to finish the season strong.

"As a team, we were all together and on the same page. I saw our team improve each game and I also saw the incoming freshman grow," said Stewart.

With hopes of making it to the National Basketball Association, Stewart stated that if it doesn't work out, he could always "use my education," making it onto the SLC Men's Basketball All-Academic Team for the third straight year.

Among 10 returning lettermen, the Demons were set to have three seniors on the roster: center Marvin Frazier and forwards Ryan King and Matt LeBato.

With the lost of Stewart and four other seniors, they are well equipped with the addition of three new transferees. Point guard Tony Dobbins, guard Devonte Hall and center Deji Adekunle are set to help the Demons on the court. Alongside them are early signees forward Reggie Kissoon and guard Ta'Jon Welcome, who closes out the 15 man roster.

"Our seniors will be missed, they gave exceptional years of basketball, but we will still have to continue to work hard and get new pieces to replace and repair the team," said McConathy.

"Positive players equals positive experience," McConathy stated, as he looked to have yet another season.

Co-Head Coaches Brooke and Scott Stoehr were named the Louisiana Sports Writers Association Co-Coaches of the Year, as they turned the women's basketball team around for the second season in a row in 2013-2014.

"We have a great sense of pride and tradition here," said Brooke Stoehr. "We were very humble as we watched these young ladies develop on and off the court."

Northwestern State women's basketball is fresh off of its best season in a decade after a Southland Conference Tournament championship and appearance in the NCAA Tournament. The Lady Demons finished with a 21-13 record, 11-7 in conference play as they took down the first, second and fifth seeds to take the league crown.

"We had a young group of girls who challenged themselves. They played and grew together and that's what led to such a successful season," said Stoehr.

Although they had a lot of adversity early in the season with away games, the Lady Demons still managed to find ways to win and play together through the hard times.

First Team All-Louisiana forward Trudy Armstead, who was also named the Most Valuable Player in the Conference Tournament, led the Lady Demons.

"I felt our season was pretty good. We had momentum going into the tournament as we won our last seven conference games of the season, giving us a first round bye," said

Armstead.

"It was always great seeing Trudy grow," said Stoehr. "She gave us the ability to score in and out of the paint."

Trudy finished in the top 10 on NSU's all-time scoring and rebounding list as she became the seventh member of the 1,000-point/700-rebound club in Lady Demon history.

With only three seniors out of eight returning lettermen, the Lady Demons signed five freshmen: guards Sami Thomas and Jackie Perez along with forwards Ndey Sonko, Andrean Fleming and Tia Youngblood. They also have two transfers: guard TaSheena Moore and forward Meghan Cross, to help along the way.

OVERALL RECORD 16-17

While most students were at home enjoying Thanksgiving break, the Northwestern State University Lady Demon volleyball team was winning their first ever Southland Conference Tournament championship.

Prior to the championship match, the Lady Demons defeated Sam Houston State and the No. 1 ranked Stephen F. Austin Ladyjacks.

The NSU Demons (16-16) defeated the University of Central Arkansas Bears (20-12) in only three sets (25-23, 25-18, 25-17) to claim the title of champions.

"We knew going in that we had to play our best volleyball game of the year on three consecutive days to win the whole thing," Assistant Coach Zach Weinberg said.

"We played three very good teams, of which we were a combined 1-4 against in the regular season, so the level of play that we put out on the court was some of our best this season," Weinberg said.

NSU senior Mackenzie Neely was named the tournament's Most Valuable Player. Neely had 32 kills and 10 blocks combined in the three games.

In the championship match, Neely had nine kills and four blocks. Junior Caiti O'Connell, who took a redshirt, added eight blocks of her own. Junior Glynna Johnson led the team in blocks with five and added seven kills as well.

Lady Demon's senior setter Emily Johnson finished with 16 assists in the final game. "Winning the tournament was definitely something that felt great after working for this for four years now," Johnson said.

"It made it especially sweet to come out of a rough season and win it when most of the conference didn't think we could," Johnson said.

Winning the Southland Conference Tournament Championship gave the Lady Demons an automatic bid to play in the NCAA Volleyball Tournament. The Demons traveled to Austin, Texas, to take on the Texas Longhorns (23-2) who were ranked nationally at the number two seed.

"We are extremely excited to be there and to have the opportunity to play Texas, but we are not just content on going," Weinberg said. "We would love to go to Austin and represent the Southland Conference well," he added.

Unfortunately the Lady Demons were swept in consecutive sets, losing 3-0. Although it did not turn out how the Lady Demons hoped, the team managed to get NSU volleyball on the national map. With the volleyball season over, the Lady Demons have now begun their off-season training, starting only one week after their season ended. It is a quick turn around but the Lady Demons know what it takes to achieve greatness.

The 2014 recruiting class for the Demon baseball team was comprised of 11 freshmen and 13 junior transfers, all of whom were mentioned in Baseball America's top recruiting classes article. After the Demons went 16-40 in 2013, it was a clean slate and a new team for second year head coach Lane Burroughs and his staff.

Not only did the Demons have their best season since 2010, but they also set a Southland Conference record with 14 more conference wins than the past season, finishing with a 33-26 record.

Burroughs talked about the team's experience at the conference tournament. "We hadn't won a post-season game since 2006."

The Demons won two games in the Southland Conference tournament and knocked out nationally seeded Sam Houston State.

"Our guys got a taste of it. What it feels like to have a championship so close to their grasp; the experience was invaluable not only to this year's team, but the future of our program," Burroughs said.

Senior Cameron Brewer led the team with a 1.93 earned run average in 18 appearances. Junior transfer Chase Daughdrill started every game for the Demons and led the offense with a .324 batting average and 38 runs batted in. Freshmen pitcher Adam Oller was announced as a Louisville Slugger Freshman All-American and Southland Conference Freshmen of the Year. Also attaining league recognition was Chase Daughdrill for making second team All-Conference and Caleb Dugas making third team.

NSU Junior Bret Underwood was selected in the 20th round of the Major League Draft by the San Francisco Giants. Underwood would turn down their offer and return to NSU for his senior season. Many talented players were on the 2014 squad and were a force to be reckoned with, but their greatest qualities were their resiliency, their love for the game and for each other.

"Everybody on this team comes from a different background. We all grew up different, including the coaches. When we get in that locker room, we become one family," Burroughs said.

The Demons have little time to reflect on their great season. After a semi-final loss to Southeastern Louisiana in the conference tournament, the Demons said farewell to eight seniors, all of whom needed to be replaced for the 2015 season.

OVERALL RECORD 30-22

The 2014 Lady Demon softball team had high expectations after their 2013 dominance. At the end of their 2013 campaign, they finished with a 40-15 overall record and 18-7 in conference play. The Lady Demons had a tough road in front of them. The 2014 schedule consisted of five top-30 finishers, four Southeastern Conference opponents and three super-regional qualifiers.

They finished with a 30-22 record while going 15-10 in conference.

Sophomore first-basemen Brittney Jones spoke about the Lady Demons resiliency, "Our seniors brought us together after a hard non-conference schedule. We all decided that we needed to pull in the same direction to reach our goal."

Although their record did not match up to the previous season, the Lady Demons clinched the No. 2 seed and found themselves facing top seeded McNeese State in the Southland Conference Tournament title game. The Demons topped McNeese 11-0 in five innings, making them the first ever Lady Demon softball team to win back-to-back tournament titles.

The Lady Demons were selected in a regional hosted by No. 17 Baylor in Waco, Texas. The regional teams included University of Houston and the University of Tulsa. After losing the opening game to Baylor with a score of 6-1, they were set to face Houston the very next day. The Lady Demons battled against the Cougars and were leading 6-4 into the bottom of the sixth inning. The Cougars found a way to score three runs, which the Demons could not surpass. The 7-6 loss ended their season and eliminated them from the postseason. Although their season ended short, there is an unparalleled confidence about the future seasons.

Senior Cassandra Barefield said, "We have a lot of confidence heading into this season. We have senior leadership who have been to the postseason the last two years. Our new freshmen have given us a strong foundation and the ability to take us farther into the playoffs than ever before."

After the season ended, the Lady Demon softball team continued to receive recognition. Senior Brittany Virgoe was voted to the All-Louisiana first team. Along with Virgoe were five other teammates selected to the All-Louisiana second team. Head coach Donald Pickett had no time to rest after the season ended. Pickett and his staff recruited and signed seven new players for the 2015 season.

Lady Demon Cross Country revamped their 2014 team, as they started and ended their season with a full freshmen roster. With high expectations of being able to manage the difficulty of it all, some Lady Demons were lucky enough to place in the top 50 as they ran in the Southland Conference Championship meet.

“Overall it was a pretty good season,” freshman Erin Sitarz said.

“We placed 10th in our conference out of the 13 teams who were there. That was a long way from placing last in conference like we did last year,” Sitarz said.

Sitarz, a native of Mount Albert in Ontario, Canada, was one of the Lady Demons front-runners this year, placing highly in many of her meets. She said that the pre-conference meet was her best meet ever, where she placed second in the 6K run. NSU placed first as a team that meet.

While she was not used to the hot Louisiana weather and its crazy customs, Sitarz said being on a cross-country team in America wasn’t much different than being on a team in Canada.

“Up north, they have smaller meets, but the competition is tougher. Down here, the meets are bigger, but it has less competition,” Sitarz explained.

With the hopes of looking for more experienced runners to help add depth to the team in the future, the cross-country team continues to be focused on the track and the field.

The Demon Cross Country team ended their 2014 season on good timing, led by freshman Joshua Wilkins. He concluded the season as NSU's top finisher in the Southland Conference Cross Country Championship. Among 95 contestants, Wilkins finished 22nd overall.

Cross-country coach Nathaniel McReynolds refers to Wilkins as an "excellent runner."

Men's cross-country team took home 10th overall in the Southland Conference Cross Country Championship match among 12 other competitors.

"We're taking a step forward in building a strong cross country tradition here. These are young teams," McReynolds said. "It's going to be a wonderful journey with these young men throughout their careers here," he stated earlier this year.

OVERALL RECORD 6-12-1

The 2014 soccer season was not what the Lady Demons had hoped for. However, there were many sparks of greatness and leadership that will carry the Lady Demons into the offseason.

They finished their season with a 6-12-1 overall record and a conference record of 3-7-1.

Their non-conference games leading up to the season featured some very tough opponents, including LSU, Texas State and Baylor. Their first win of the season would not come until their seventh game when they defeated Prairie View A&M 4-0.

These would not be the only struggles for the Lady Demons this season. After not having a win through their first seven conference games, the Lady Demons would regroup before their final four games together.

Through resiliency, senior leadership and young talent stepping up, the Lady Demons would win three of their final four conference games. Their only loss in that span was a late scoring goal from Southeastern Louisiana.

Sophomore striker Brooke Eastburg spoke about her team and its successes. "NSU has not seen a team this deep in a long time, we have a lot of potential and can do great things," said Eastburg. The Lady Demon Soccer Team brought in 14 incoming freshman this year with hopes that they will be the strong foundation that NSU soccer needs.

Jackie Strug, senior defender/midfielder was the lone award recipient from this year's team. The Plano, Texas, native was voted honorable mention All-Southland Conference. Strug was one of eight seniors honored on senior day that was capped by a thrilling 2-0 victory over Texas A&M-Corpus Christi. The Lady Demon Soccer Team has many great things to look forward to in the future.

OVERALL RECORD 20-6

The 2014 Lady Demon tennis team went 14-8 overall and 6-3 in Southland Conference play.

They lived up to the hype. The Lady Demons ended the regular season 20-6. This would be good enough to share the Southland Conference regular season championship with Texas A&M Corpus Christi (22-5).

Their 20-win season is only their second in program history and their fourth overall regular season championship, winning previous titles in 2010, 1994 and 1989.

Texas A&M Corpus Christi would eventually host the Southland Conference Tournament in which they defeated the Lady Demons 4-2. After the Lady Demons swept the doubles matches to take a 2-0 lead, they then lost four straight singles matches for a 4-2 loss to Corpus Christi.

The 2013-14 Lady Demon tennis team got it done in the classroom as well. They earned a slot in the Intercollegiate Tennis Association's All-Academic Team roster. Four Lady Demons were named ITA Scholar-Athletes.

The Lady Demons not only dominated on the court, but off as well. The team boasted a 3.71 GPA on the 4.0 scale in 2014. Receiving grade honors were juniors Tatiana Larina and Amy Williams and sophomores Natalya Krutova and Daniela Simonova.

The Demons ended the 2013 track season having to say goodbye to the legendary Leon Johnson. In his time, Johnson coached over 100 NCAA qualifiers, multiple national champions and athletes who ran in the Olympics.

NSU announced the new head track and field coach to be alumnus Mike Heimerman in August 2013. He graduated from NSU in 1998 with a terrific career as a thrower on the track and field team. His career topped when he won the shot put at the 1996 Southland Conference Outdoor Championships. Heimerman had a total of 18 years with both men's and woman's track at NSU. He started as a graduate assistant then became an assistant coach. Later he served as the women's track and field head coach for six years.

The 2014 men's track and field season was highlighted by the efforts of senior Justin Walker. At the Southland Conference Outdoor Track and Field Championships in May, Walker ran one of the fastest 100 meters times in the world. His 9.95 time came with a 2.5 mph tailwind, which is legal for rankings and qualifying, but over the legal limit of 2.0 mph for records. Heimerman described his 100 meters time as an "incredible feat."

Walker ended his career a three-time All American, holding school records in the 100 and 200 meters. Walker won six titles over his career, mostly won this season when he swept the indoor and outdoor titles for the 100 and 200 meters. According to former teammates, Walker is now training for a professional track team in Florida.

The men's track and field team had a busy offseason, signing five new members to their squad. These new members include four high school athletes and one junior college transfer. The signees were brought on for their special skills in the triple jump, high jump, discus throw and 100 meter hurdles.

The Lady Demon track and field team ended their outdoor season on a very high note. Clutch performances by Consuela Lindsay and Por'sha Thomas on the third and final day of the Southland Conference Outdoor Championships placed the Lady Demons on the podium, finishing third in the conference as a team. Rivals Sam Houston State (176 points) and Stephen F. Austin (132 points) finished in first and second place, while the Demons managed to top Central Arkansas by seven points.

On the second day of the championships, three Lady Demons took podium spots in their respective events. Jessica Talley won her second league title in the javelin while Rechelle Bessard and Shakemia

Johnson finished first and second in the discus.

The Lady Demons ended their season with many accolades. Four athletes made the All-Louisiana track team in their individual events. Rechelle Bessard was the front-runner for these awards, receiving All-Louisiana honors for her record setting outdoor hammer throw and her 163-5 foot discus throw. The throw was placed as the second best throw by a Louisiana competitor. The other three Lady Demons receiving honors were Consuela Lindsay, Quiana Griffin and Keona Jackson.

The Lady Demons got the job done in the classroom, placing three athletes on the Southland Conference's Cross Country and Track and Field

All-Academic Team. Rechelle Bessard and Por'sha Thomas were automatic selections for the award, as well as being named to the Southland All-Conference Team. Bessard posted a 3.09 GPA toward a degree in hospitality and tourism management. Sophomore Por'sha Thomas boasted a 3.22 GPA in biology, and lastly, senior Quiana Griffin notched a 3.16 GPA in health and exercise science.

The Demon Academic Services serves as a home to over 400 student-athletes. Academic coordinators Carrie Green and Kelee Roddy help student-athletes with study skills, tests and transitions.

The tutoring center is available to all athletes. Although they are encouraged to attend voluntarily, some coaches make it mandatory for their team to attend study hall.

“Our basketball coach makes us go five hours a week in study hall and I use that time wisely,” said Sabri Tompson. “It can get pretty exhausting, but I was taught to put school before basketball and that’s what I’m accustomed to.”

Sophomore business major

Tompson has a 4.0 grade point average and takes pride in his grades. As a basketball player, days are long and tiring, but at the end of the day, he said he always asks his teammates if they need help with their homework.

“I hold myself and my teammates to higher standards. We all help each other in the best way we could,” he stated.

In August, NSU’s athletic department was awarded a $780,000 grant for three years from the Accelerating Academic Success Program, awarded by the NCAA that provides crucial support that allows NSU to enhance services for their student-athletes.

“We needed that grant. It helped us give the students more tutors with a larger variety of subjects to cover and learn,” said Roddy.

These tutors cover subjects ranging from the general areas of math, science, and English as well as specific areas such as economics, accounting, anatomy and physiology, chemistry, history, psychology, Spanish, technical composition and more.

Located on the second floor of the Johnnie Emmons Academic Center, the tutoring center is open from Monday until Thursday from 8 a.m. – 9 p.m. and Friday from 8 a.m. – 5 p.m. The center serves as a one-stop shop, as most athletes are located in the Athletic Fieldhouse once classes are over for the day.

The tutoring center also has special programs to help assist the students. The Enhanced Academic Program is for select students who need extra attention. The purpose of the program is to help guide student-athletes who are in need of additional academic support toward successfully achieving academic independence.

Those students who are in the program are required to maintain a certain amount of study hours weekly. They are required to make sure that they arrive promptly and that they meet with selected groups.

The student-athletes worked together to achieve a cumulative 2.95 grade point average on a 4.0 scale during the spring 2014 semester. That served as an all-time best for the Demons’ athletic program. With improvements in both the Academic Progress Rate and the Graduation Success Rate, the athletic program is producing knowledgeable student-athletes.

“We are pretty lucky to have such smart athletes,” said Green. “Not only are our coaches recruiting great athletes, but they are recruiting students who are excelling in the classroom.”

POTPOURRI FACULTY MEMBER OF THE YEAR

theresa kyzar

by Jordan Smith

Photography: Karalee Scouten

“I truly believe education is the gateway to opportunity.”

Ten years into teaching at Northwestern, Theresa Kyzar has the same passion for education and growth as when she started. For someone with such a desire to teaching and see her students succeed, there’s no question why her students voted her as the Potpourri’s Faculty Member of the Year.

Kyzar began her education at the University of Texas in Arlington where she obtained her bachelor of science. After graduation, she began a career in corporate America, and didn’t think much about going back to school. However, once she lost a cousin in the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks in New York City, Kyzar gained a new outlook on life, work and education. As a way to honor her cousin’s life, Kyzar decided to go back to school to get her master’s in order to teach and be in the service of others.

Kyzar began her journey at the University of Phoenix, earning a Master of Nursing and a Master of Business Administration, and she has been teaching at Northwestern since she obtained the degrees.

Kyzar teaches classes in the BSN and ASN programs at the Natchitoches and Shreveport campuses.

Teaching clinical and pre-clinical students has given Kyzar the opportunity to see the growth and changes those students overcome and encounter. The anxiety and stress lie in all levels of the nursing education, but those levels greatly increase once students enter clinicals. To combat the anxiety and stress, she sees her students learn the desire to persevere and succeed, which Kyzar believes is the only way they are able to triumph. The process of starting school to completing clinical education results in an entirely different student; one who is more driven, confident and self-assured.

Kyzar doesn’t remember the easy teachers she had along the way, but the tough ones, which is why she has gained a reputation on campus for her toughness. She strives to honor her past educators in that way, and knows her students are better because of it.

Most of what Kyzar teaches her students can’t be found in a book. Books can only get a student so far, but how he or she uses that education will determine success.

“I truly believe education is the gateway to opportunity,” said Kyzar.

Kyzar said that one will never waste a day of his or her life being a nurse, and she considers herself the luckiest person to be both a nurse and an educator. Since her start at Northwestern, she has witnessed the growth of the students and the program. As she has continued to grow, she has begun the education toward a PhD from Capella University. One of her mentors along the way has continued to inspire her with the lesson that when people desire and move themselves, they advance the world and education is the key. This is a lesson Kyzar strives to leave with every student she encounters.

Northwestern State University offers 68 majors from biology to theatre and everything in between. Choosing a major is no easy task with so options. Many students change their major within the first two years of college, going on different paths than previously imagined. The great part about Northwestern is that whatever you want to study can be done here.

Northwestern State University's College of Education and Human Development aims to provide better educators and leaders for tomorrow. Not only do the students share a common major, but just like the instructors, they share a love for education. The college students learn through new enrichment programs, technology and innovative techniques.

In addition to teacher preparation and other school personnel programs, the college offers degrees in adult education, health and exercise science, health promotion, sports administration and student affairs in higher education. All of these programs are nationally accredited teacher education programs and with the help of the professors, NSU is producing classroom-ready teachers and education professionals.

With the numerous changes in the education system, there are many skeptics of the education field, but many of Northwestern's education majors feel that it is a new era for teaching.

"In my department, there is more focus on teaching future teachers how to evolve to the ever-changing times and curriculum," senior education major Jessica Viator said. "Everything is so student-driven now, which is a big change from school even a few years ago. This concept is being modeled in our education classrooms constantly."

COLLEGE OF NURSING AND ALLIED HEALTH

an elite reputation

By Hunter Horton

Photography: Karalee Scouten

Northwestern's College of Nursing and Allied Health has a deeply rooted reputation of being the premier nursing school of the South. The students and faculty continue this tradition by instilling the values of success and care in every patient they come in contact with. Even though the college has gone through some changes, they still maintain their elite reputation and continue to provide the best care possible.

Directed by Dr. Dana Clawson, the college has implemented a Natchitoches campus-wide uniform policy. After the Shreveport campus implemented the policy, directors at the Natchitoches campus decided to adopt the policy. The uniform is worn at all times, including the classroom. The summer term was a test run for the program and was met with mixed reactions. The college felt they were "behind the times" of other colleges that had uniform policies in effect for years.

The attire was chosen to include Northwestern purple scrubs with closed toed black shoes. Should students choose not to wear this combination, they can elect to wear khaki pants with a purple, embroidered, polo-style, Northwestern shirt. Should a student not comply with the dress code, they will be dismissed from class, and be given an unexcused absence.

Sophomore nursing student Kristina Curley has mixed feelings about the new policy.

"The rules do not have to be followed by the average college student and this sets us apart and teaches us to become more professional. I think there should be more alternatives and we should have more guidelines on what is appropriate instead of a set uniform," said Curley.

The college feels that their students should dress for the job and these expectations should be maintained at all times. They want their students to have an equal or better chance of getting hired or selected for clinical than of students from other schools.

Because of this image of professionalism, the college has kept their reputation of success and continues to graduate professionals trained in the art of nursing and allied health. The uniform policy is here to stay and will become a staple of professionalism and care for all NSU nursing and radiologic technology students.

As new changes to policies may occur, the standard of care and top-notch education that the college of Nursing and Allied Health provides is one thing that will be at Northwestern to stay.

COLLEGE OF SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY AND BUSINESS

learning a new trade

The College of Science, Technology and Business prides itself on its success rate among students and the range of offered courses.

Students find themselves in the College of Science, Technology and Business not only because of the core curriculum requirements, but also because of the variety of degrees offered.

The college is comprised of departments such as: the School of Business, Biological and Physical Sciences; Family and Consumer Sciences; Mathematics and Engineering Technology; Military Sciences and the Small Business Development Center.

Junior Jennie Bayonne is enrolled in the Department of Biological Sciences. “I’m a biology major because I plan to become a physical therapist,” Bayonne said. “I figured being a biology major would increase my chances of reaching my long-time goal.”

Science professor Dr. Greg Hogan encourages students to enroll in the Department of Biological and Physical Sciences. “Our graduates are enrolling in medical, dentistry, veterinary and physical therapy schools,” Hogan said. “We have graduates that are being accepted in graduate programs, as well as receiving jobs after graduation.”

The Science Department of the College of Science, Technology and Business isn’t the only department thriving.

Dr. Margaret Kilcoyne, director of the School of Business, was the recipient of the Governor’s Technology Educator of the Year Award. Kilcoyne emphasizes the use of technology in the classroom. “I believe by modeling the use of technology in the classroom, I’m encouraging students to bring those skills into their professional and personal life,” Kilcoyne stated.

Northwestern State's College of Arts, Letters, Graduate Studies and Research was established in 1986. The college includes the Department of Biological and Physical Sciences, Department of Criminal Justice, History and Social Sciences, Department of Language and Communication, Department of Mathematics, Department of Engineering Technology, School of Business, School of Creative and Performing Arts and the Scholars' College. Students enrolled in any of these departments are sure to receive a high quality education from knowledgeable and experienced professors.

Each of the departments within the College of Arts and Letters is lead by a department head who guides students in their studies. The Department of Language and Communication is lead by Dr. Paula Furr. She accepted the position as the department head for the fall 2014 semester. Furr strives to ensure quality education for every student that enters into her department. NSU's College of Arts, Letters, Graduate Studies and Research is a great place to study for students interested in anything from science to communication to criminal justice.

LOUISIANA SCHOLARS' COLLEGE

excellence in education

By Emily Fontenot

The Louisiana Scholars' College is no longer the university's best kept secret. Scholars' students have become some of the most influential leaders on campus.

"Scholars' are in student government, on the honor court, in sports, in CAPA and in Greek societies, as opposed to staying away from all that," professor Holly Stave said. "I like seeing that change."

As the state's only designated honors college, the Louisiana Scholars' College provides students with rigorous, discussion-based courses. With its small student-to-teacher ratio, the Scholars' College allows students to form meaningful connections with their professors.

"I've been meeting a lot of people that, surprisingly, have similar interests as me," freshman Devon Landry said of her experience in the Louisiana Scholars' College so far.

"The classes are really interesting, and the professors make it easier. I just like how they give you one-on-one time. It makes it much easier to understand my subjects."

The Louisiana Scholars' College went through a number of transitions internally during 2014. Davina McClain stepped down from her position to teach full-time after serving as director of the college for seven years, and Scholars' biology professor Curt Phifer filled in as interim until a permanent replacement was found. William Housel, social science professor at NSU since 2003, was appointed director at the beginning of the fall semester.

One of Housel's main goals as director is to work more closely with the university on recruitment and retention. He hopes to recruit a freshman class of 100 students in 2015.

"We've got good standards already, and we're just going to stick with them more strictly," Housel said concerning his approach to the recruitment and retention situation the Louisiana Scholars' College faces alongside post-secondary educators across the country. "There's enough qualified people around that we don't have to water down the standards."

CAPA: THEATRE AND DANCE

constantly refining technique

By Apryl Jenkins

Photography: Karalee Scouten

The Northwestern Theatre and Dance Department is filled with a talented and dedicated group of faculty and students. Home to approximately 90 majors and minors, it is one of the busiest and most demanding departments on campus. Faculty and students stay very busy as they pour themselves into their craft, both in and outside the classroom.

The theatre department is one of the three degree programs within the Northwestern State University, Mrs. H.D. Dear, Sr. and Alice E. Dear School of Creative and Performing Arts. The department was named Center for Excellence in the Arts for the University of Louisiana System. It is also one of only 150 programs in the United States accredited by the National Association of Schools of Theatre.

Each year the department puts on four to six productions directed by the theatre and dance faculty. Students also have the chance to direct second season productions, choreograph dance concerts and do lighting, sound and set design.

Graduating theatre majors receive a bachelor of science degree in theatre with a concentration in performance and directing, musical theatre, stage design, technology or dance.

Commitment, passion, skill and well roundedness are among the qualities these students must possess in order to be successful. The faculty works hard to provide these students with the knowledge and skill to be prepared to enter the professional world of theatre. Passion and motivation come from the individual and these students are great examples of people who embody these traits.

According to Coordinator and Director Scott Burrell, one of the most important lessons professors teach students is to learn to accept rejection.

"Students will hear 'No thank you' more often than not. It is simply the nature of the beast," Burrell said. Majors must get applied theatre hours along with their curriculum requirements. It requires them to spend time in the various shops learning the different skills that are necessary to be successful in the theatre business. Many professional theatres look for someone who is efficient in many areas. Most actors/actresses build sets, make costumes and do backstage work as well.

Students involved in theatre and dance become very close because they spend so much time together attending rehearsals, and classes.

"I think our unity is the most inspiring aspect of the department. We fight like brothers and sisters, but we love each other so much and it's cool to know that no matter what we will never give up on each other," Tyler Price, senior theatre major said.

Price was a member of the cast of Sweeney Todd, one of the productions the department put on during October of the fall semester. Many graduates of the department have gone on to work in professional companies, Broadway shows, cruise ships, equity theatres, theme parks and graduate programs.

Northwestern State University offers many classes in the Art Department, including drawing, design, photography, painting and jewelry making.

The photography classes teach students the art of photography. The first thing students learn is the camera, how it works and how it can be used to advantage. As the students progress into the higher levels of photography, they learn to work with film, black and white photography and pinhole cameras.

Pinhole cameras are cameras that are created with a box, tin cans or other household objects. The inside of the object must be black; no light can get through. A small hole must be poked in one end of the 'camera' and then photo paper put at the other end. When exposed to light, the photo paper will ingrain an image on the paper. Then, all you have to do is develop the photo paper and you will have your picture.

"You will never get it on the first try. You will have to take the same picture several times in a pinhole camera before you get it right," Michael Yankowski tells his photography students.

In jewelry making students learned how to make a piece of jewelry using a method called lost cast waxing. Lost cast waxing is a method used to duplicate something using a cast. Students pour metal into the cast and it creates a duplicate of the original.

In the drawing and painting classes, students learn the basics. Practicing on a daily basis improves their skills. These classes are designed to allow students to have self-expression.

"When you finish one assignment, two more will pop up in its place. You have to be dedicated to these classes if you want to succeed," Matthew Stevenson said. "You will learn how to draw everything from faces - to flowers - to a river."

The design classes are meant to teach students the art of composition. Students learn different art techniques and methods to create the same image. Students learn to place things on the page so that it catches the eye.

CAPA: MUSIC

one more time

By Apryl Jenkins

Photography: Derrick Notice

The music department's presence on campus is defined not only by the sheer number of students in the program, but more importantly by the dedication, long hours and professionalism that the students and professors maintain. NSU's music program provides many performance opportunities in both vocal and instrumental ensembles. This includes: chamber choir, orchestra, wind ensembles, jazz band and marching band. These prestigious performance groups have a reputation that they never cease to uphold in the community and statewide. Prospective students flock to join this program because it truly is one of the best.

Renee Bennett is a fourth year member of the Spirit of Northwestern marching band. Since her freshman year, SON has allowed her the opportunities to perform at LSU's stadium as well as marching band competitions and exhibitions. This spring, the band traveled to Dublin, Ireland, to perform in the St. Patrick's Day Parade.

Bennett is a music education major and feels that the opportunities she has been given as a member of the band have been valuable in developing skills she will use in her chosen field.

"Each year, during our annual marching competition that we host for high school bands, I have been able to talk to band directors and discuss techniques that they use and how I can apply them when I become a teacher," Bennett said.

Beau Voinche is a member of the marching band and chamber choir. Chamber choir attends rehearsals Monday through Thursday, but more often than not, director Dr. Burt Allen keeps them past the scheduled rehearsal time because everyone is so focused that they lose track of time.

"Rehearsals are pretty hardcore. On the first day of class we started sight reading pieces for the first concert," Voinche said.

The chamber choir puts on several concerts during the year including "Lessons and Carols," a Christmas concert held in Natchitoches'

Minor Basilica; the symphony chorus concert, which is combined with the orchestra; concert choir where major works such as Mozart Requiem or Carmina Burranna are performed; and lastly, the Christmas Gala.

"I take away so much from chamber. Wanting to perform and teach choir after I graduate makes being a part of such a professional ensemble very rewarding," Voinche said.

Students choosing to major in music must be willing to work hard and dedicate many hours to perfecting their art. However, the rewards are endless and these students take what they do very seriously.

Voinche explained that the people he has met will remain close for a time to come.

"The music department is my extended, dysfunctional and talented family. People come and go, but you will always be welcomed by a fellow CAPA person. No matter where you are, if you see a fellow music major, you know you instantly have a friend there."

GRADUATE SCHOOL

college: round two

By Hunter Horton

The Graduate School at Northwestern State University offers many masters programs to students aspiring to obtain a graduate's degree in fields of study such as the arts, homeland security and counseling, according to their website www.graduateschool.nsula.edu. These programs are the highest level of education that NSU has to offer.

"Northwestern's Graduate School maintains as its mission and purpose to develop, provide and support innovative, responsive and accessible graduate programs of the highest quality," states the website. Not only do the graduates strive for success in the classroom, but also the majority of students are doing so while maintaining lives outside of NSU. The school is seeing an increase in the enrollment of adults who are finishing their education.

The Graduate School aims to provide better leaders in the community through building confidence through education and a strong foundation of knowledge. Vice Provost and Dean of the Graduate School, Dr. Steve Horton, said, "As we've increased the number of new graduate programs in varied areas, the diversity of students has changed. We are seeing more older adults who are finishing an initial career and are now embarking on a new one."

Leesville/Fort Polk HISTORY

a brighter future for everyone

By Jordan Creasey

Photography: submitted by Jordan Creasey

In the 1970's, the want and need for expansion of the Natchitoches campus rose. Soon talk was to start an "outreach" program. When Leesville/Fort Polk heard about this idea, they donated a 160-acre tract of land to Northwestern State University in 1974.

By the summer of 1976, the first classroom-administration building was erected. President Arnold Kilpatrick declared that the traditional university campus, "is no longer capable of meeting the unique challenges of today," and that, "educators at Northwestern respond to the challenge to go where the people are." From there on out, change was coming and civilians and military families both embraced this easier way to go to college without having to drive an hour or longer to school.

Today, the campus has three buildings that include a student lounge, library, nursing lab, several distance learning classrooms, three computer labs, a compass testing site and also a newly renovated proctoring test area for online and distance learning students.

The Leesville/Fort Polk campus went through several changes this year with the remodeling of the administration wing and newly improved distance learning classrooms through compressed video.

When walking through the buildings at the Leesville campus you see a variety of different types of students.

"The campus is an easy adjustment for anyone, if you are straight out of high school like me or if you just want to get back into school like my mother did," freshmen business administration major Matthew Creasey said.

"The teachers make you feel comfortable asking for help after class because they are here on this campus," Creasey said.

Looking into a classroom, you might see a soldier in uniform, a high school graduate or even your friend's mother sitting in one of Dr. Kathleen Smith's history classes. The ages of Leesville/Fort Polk's campus students range anywhere from high school students to a retiree who wants to get a degree.

FIRST ANNUAL HOT CHOCOLATE PARTY

By Jordan Creasey

Photography: Jordan Creasey

Everyone in college knows just how difficult and busy finals week is for students. Your nose is stuck in your books, study guides and computers. There is barely time to relax or take a small break. Head Librarian at the Leesville/Fort Polk campus Anna MacDonald found an activity that relieved the stress for the students and faculty.

This fall 2014 semester was the first annual hot chocolate party held during finals week. MacDonald hopes to keep up the tradition of a cup of hot cocoa for students during busy times of the semester. Many teachers at the campus allowed their students a break from class to get the hot chocolate and treats that were offered in the library.

Students came into the library to find a large kettle of hot water and cocoa mix. Along a table was an assortment of sweet add-ins. There were also gift bags and a raffle for giveaways of mugs, totes, and car decals.

“The drinks were perfect, especially on the cold day that we had,” said freshman nursing major Bryce Adam. “The choices that were given were awesome! And not to mention it was free, which is always a plus.”

Students were unanimous in agreement to attend a second hot cocoa party.

“It was a convenient retreat from the craziness of finals,” said freshman secondary education major Savanna Parker. “I’d take any break from finals that I can find. Being a freshman and experiencing finals week is a whole new world.”

Students and faculty enjoyed hot chocolate in the library as a way to de-stress from finals week.

MILITARY CONNECTION TO LEESVILLE/FORT POLK CAMPUS

by Jordan Creasey

The military connection with the Leesville/Fort Polk campus has been continuously growing every year. When the satellite campus was built in the 1970's, the land was actually donated by Fort Polk. They knew that this would be a great investment for their soldiers assigned to post.

Walking by a classroom, one may not notice the tall man with a buzz-cut sitting in the middle of the classroom taking notes, but shortly students realize that he is a soldier that has been assigned to Fort Polk.

Just at the Leesville/Fort Polk satellite campus there were over 20 active-military students attending classes for the academic year of 2014-2015.

"The campus is great because they accommodate with our busy schedules," stated one of the active duty students. "It also helps that the Leesville/Fort Polk campus is only a couple of minutes away from one of the side gates to get on to post."

The convenience of the campus works well with military students. Teachers know that they have schedules that could change suddenly and know that it is possible that they might have to leave abruptly to go out into the box to run drills. Teachers at the campus work with each student to figure out an alternate schedule.

The Leesville/ Fort Polk campus also is involved with Fort Polk during graduation time. Northwestern State's satellite campus, along with the other satellite campuses located on Fort Polk, hold their graduation ceremony at the Main Post Chapel. All the satellite campuses join together to congratulate the new graduates and their families.

PROFESSOR SPOTLIGHT: DR. KATHLEEN SMITH

by Jordan Creasey
Photography: Jordan Creasey

As students walk in the front door of the administration building, a look to the left will show a door with collages of different things. Reading the name on the wall, students can see the name of is professor of American History Dr. Kathleen Smith.

Smith has been working for Northwestern State University for 29 years. She started off working at the Natchitoches main campus for 11 years. However, 18 years ago she decided to begin teaching American history classes at Leesville/Fort Polk because of the number of military students who wanted to major in history. She knew that working at the Leesville campus would be beneficial for these students.

Today, Smith teaches a range of American history classes. She teaches the core and basic histories that every student needs to graduate. She also teaches a new upper level class every semester, allowing her students to have a constant upper level for those majoring in general studies with a concentration in social science and history.

Smith is the 2014 recipient of the Larry Monk Award, given to a professor yearly, which she was presented with at the football game on Nov. 1. Smith has also been awarded the Clyde Bostick Endowed Professorship. In the summer of 2014, she went to London and submitted a paper on the First World War at the University of London.

With such a busy summer, it must be difficult to try to plan ahead for future successes. Smith is actually working on her next book on American music and propaganda in the First World War.

“This campus has a great family atmosphere,” stated Smith. “Everyone really cares and takes care of each other. And the classes are of a size where you really get to know the students in your class,” Smith said.

When asked her favorite memory of working as a professor, she looked to her board on the wall and replied that the smiling faces of her former students with their diplomas are her most cherished memory. She always makes sure to get a picture of her students after the graduation ceremony at the main campus.

PINNING CEREMONY

reaching major milestones in nursing in CENLA

For nursing students, the pinning ceremony is a big deal. The ceremony recognizes the student's achievements of completing all the curricula for the bachelor's degree and honors the student's dedication and hard work. The ceremony is traditionally held in Alexandria at the Pentecostals of Alexandria in the main sanctuary. Sitting in the room, students could feel the joy and excitement in the air, and it was also evident on the faces of their families and the faculty.

Opening remarks of the 10th annual pinning ceremony were made by Carolyn Hartt, nursing coordinator for the Alexandria campus.

Leading up to the pinning ceremony every year, students vote on the faculty member and a fellow student they would like to speak at their event. The faculty member chosen this year was Rebecca Harrell.

Harrell entertained the crowd saying, "You know you're a nursing student if you feel the need to write your name, date and initials on the milk jug or if you find yourself deciding you could start an 18 gauge IV on the vein of a person in line at the supermarket." She closed her ceremony by challenging the students to touch lives, teach the patients and be compassionate.

The student chosen to speak was Jasmine Hamlin. Hamlin engaged the crowd with stories of the student's journey through nursing school, such as the warning given by the faculty the first day of class, telling them they should avoid having a baby or getting married while they were in clinical. She encouraged her class to remember two things when interacting with individuals, "Yes I am a nurse, and no, I do not want to look at it."

After a brief slide show chronicling the students' journey through nursing school, Judy Kreideweis was invited to explain the significance of the nursing pin. The nursing pin symbolizes the start of a new adventure and journey as a registered nurse once students pass their NCLEX.

Harrell, along with fellow faculty member Leah Pearce, presented the pins to the students. The students then received their lamps and recited the Nightingale pledge led by faculty member Stephen Peters.

To close the ceremony, instructors made their final remarks challenging the students to learn something new every day, month and year. They also encouraged the students to make nursing a lifelong learning process.

Alexandria CENLA

a brighter future for everyone

By Lisa Lee

Photography: submitted by Lisa Lee

On the outskirts of Alexandria sits the Learning Center for Rapides Parish, nestled within the England Industrial Airpark and community. The Northwestern State University CENLA campus offices are located on the second floor, while the classes are held in various classrooms throughout the facility. The Learning Center is conveniently housed just a few minutes from I-49. With this being the case, it makes for convenient and easy access to students throughout central Louisiana and the surrounding areas.

The CENLA campus offers a variety of courses for several different degree programs: business administration, criminal justice, nursing, radiologic sciences, social work and general studies. Without the effort and time invested by the CENLA staff and faculty, daily operations would not run as smoothly, and students would not have the many opportunities provided to them as a result of the talented faculty and staff.

The executive director for the campus is Jason Parks. Parks has been with NSU for almost three years. On any given day, he can be seen running in and out of the office working to keep campus affairs in order and trying to promote the CENLA campus within the community.

Peggy Lodridge is the campus manager and has been with NSU for 30 years. Students know her for being the person who administers test proctoring when they are taking online or video courses.

Lodridge is the first friendly face you see upon entering the CENLA campus offices and is the source of all information and documents NSU related. If a student wants to know about enrolling or is in need of financial aid forms, she knows the right answer.

Chris Eding is the administrative coordinator for the CENLA offices on England Airpark and has been with Northwestern for 11 years.

Some of the faculty and staff that make up the CENLA campus are not located on England Airpark center. The nursing and radiologic science faculty members are located at the Rapides Regional Medical Center.

There are many full-time and adjunct faculty members who spend countless hours working to provide students with the best learning opportunities possible.

The coordinator of the nursing program is Carolyn Hartt, who has been involved with the CENLA nursing program since the program's opening.

The faculty and staff at the medical arts building would not be able to stay organized if it weren't for the help of their administrative coordinator, Gwen Cope.

Cope works to keep the faculty and students up to date on any and all information, whether it may be computer lab closures or documents for the nursing or radiologic science departments.

Other faculty and staff who work on the CENLA campus include Dr. Ruth Weinzettle, coordinator of the social work program. She can be seen in her office during the week advising current and potential students.

Dr. Wade Tyler, the department head for the social work program, can also be seen on campus and often delivers campus mail to the Natchitoches main campus.

The CENLA campus provides opportunities for students all over Louisiana. The faculty and staff are vast, but without each of the individuals who work there, the opportunities wouldn't be available to students. The faculty and staff invest much of their time and themselves into the students, giving the students confidence to excel in their chosen career path and to make their mark on the world.

Why do you race? Many individuals, including students at Northwestern State University's CENLA campus, raced for their loved ones who had passed, while other participants and students raced in celebration of the life and survival of their friends and family.

Cancer affects many people from all over the world. Regardless of gender, financial status or job status, countless people are affected daily by breast cancer. Whether you are the one with the cancer diagnosis or a family member of someone who has been diagnosed, the emotional strain and burdens can be enormous.

According to the Susan G Komen website, there will be over 230,000 new cases of invasive breast cancer and 20,000 cases breast cancer in 2014 alone. Susan G Komen has invested more than $2.5 billion in groundbreaking research, community health outreach, advocacy and programs in more than 30 countries. They donate about 20 percent of their profit yearly to fund breast cancer research and help countless individuals every year.

Another important reason individuals and students raced was for a better tomorrow; a tomorrow where treatment is no longer a game of luck and those affected by breast cancer can be cancer free.

The Susan G Komen foundation is broken up into chapters over the country. The Acadiana chapter serves central Louisiana and eight other parishes. According to the Susan G Komen Acadiana website, the chapter was founded in 1999 and has invested over $3.2 million in the fight against breast cancer. About 75 percent of the funds raised benefit local residents. Over the $2.4 million raised thus far has been invested in the Acadiana and Central Louisiana communities.

The students on the Alexandria campus pride themselves on their involvement and giving back to the community. The radiology and nursing students joined together with the help of their instructors to fight against breast cancer. They arrived at 7:30 a.m. on Oct. 11 at the Rapides Regional Medical Arts Building prepared to walk or run for the cure. To get in the spirit of walking or running for the cure, students bought and wore custom-designed lime green shirts. The message on the shirts was simple: "Nursing and Rad Sci unite in the fight against breast cancer." Many of the students sported other items such as tutus, colored shoes and ribbons, while other students had painted faces and colorful jewelry.

Not only did the students participate in Race for the Cure, but many brought along their friends and family. One student brought her infant in pink to show support for breast cancer.

Events like this are what great memories are made of and the amount of people who dedicated their time to walk or run was numerous. With all of these factors combined, the race turned out to be a happy time that supported a great cause.

CHILD AND FAMILY NETWORK

The Northwestern State University Child and Family Network is a part of the Department of Family and Consumer Sciences. The main office is located on the Shreveport campus with satellite offices on the Alexandria and Natchitoches campuses. The Child and Family Network started in 1999 in Shreveport. After a year of service in Shreveport the network expanded their efforts to the satellite offices in Alexandria and Natchitoches. Since its initial opening, the Child and Family Network has grown to 22 full-time employees and several individuals they employ for training and other services. Most people have never heard of the Child and Family Network and if they have, most of them don't understand all their job entails. According to Executive Director Nancy Alexander, the Child and Family Network has a variety of jobs. One aspect of the network is dedicated to training employees. They teach individuals to work in places like head-start centers, childcare centers and public schools or those involved with direct childcare through a variety of workshops, which are required for licensing.

The Child and Family Network also encourages their students to obtain their Child Development Associate. The CDA is a 120-hour comprehensive program of classes and workshops that prepares individuals to test for national certification.

Another job the Child and Family Network assists with is helping parents locate childcare services. They do this by maintaining a database of information about each childcare provider registered with their department. The information they keep includes whether these facilities offer special services, the childcare site or if meals are provided for children. The Child and Family Network also has information for at-home child care centers.

The Child and Family Network does not regulate childcare facilities, but they assist individuals in understanding rules and regulations related to childcare. This allows childcare providers to further their goals and ambitions. The Child and Family Network staff assists individuals by visiting childcare centers and registered homes to answer questions and clear up confusion in regards to issues like room arrangement or the purchase of new equipment. Essentially, they become a mentor to the students to help them feel confident and prepared to work with young children. Another thing they facilitate is the Louisiana Pathways Childcare Career Development system. This program is to ensure those in childcare have adequate licensure for tax credit from the Department of Revenue. This program helps the childcare individuals improve and expand their career with information on what they need to do to remain current in their licensure. When it is time to take another class, the individuals get a letter from the pathways that tells them what to do and who they need to contact.

There is also a statewide scholarship initiative. Last year alone, the state of Louisiana gave $340,000 in tuition assistance to various colleges that offer early childhood courses across the state. This is an incentive to many people because often those in childcare do not make a high salary and without this assistance, they may not be able to afford classes or further certification.

The Child and Family Network has a very important responsibility to maintain. Without the tireless work and effort of the department staff, things would not run smoothly. They would not be as successful as they have been. The staff goes above and beyond the call of duty to help and teach childcare workers. They teach a variety of topics within their workshops related to teaching children and organizing childcare centers or other health topics, such as shaken baby syndrome or what to do in the event lead of poisoning. Because the Child and Family Network realizes childcare workers are helping to care for and teach the next generation, they want the children to be knowledgeable so that they could change the world and be successful.

The Child and Family Network and its staff touch the lives of individuals throughout the state. They work to assist these individuals in regards to any concerns or issues they may have. The Child and Family Network is the unsung hero of childcare, working to make it better a little at a time.

NURSING 101

By Joy Hill

Asking any nursing student how school is going will bring an array of answers. One can expect excitement, tears, fake laughter, smiles or even more tears. Nursing school is not an easy task, but it is a task worth the hard work that each and every student displays.

The Northwestern State University School of Nursing has a reputation of excellence, and they are putting professional, safe, competent nurses on the market. More than 7,000 students have received degrees from NSU's School of Nursing and Allied Health, which, according to the NSU website, is the home of the oldest state supported nursing program. Not only does the School of Nursing have a reputable name, but NSU also has many nursing professors who are members of Beta Chi, an international Honor Society of Nursing. It is no secret that NSU is diverse in nursing. NSU hosts LPNs, RNs, MSNs, ASNs, BSNs and even those with Doctorates walk the halls.

The School of Nursing curriculum is composed of different levels. Students must complete these levels to eventually reach their degrees. The levels teach the fundamentals of nursing and how to care for patients in all medical fields. Northwestern nursing students are truly in a league of their own when it comes to education.

Shreveport COMPASSION FOR THE COMMUNITY

By Joy Hill

As David Thomas put it, “unselfish and noble actions are the most radiant pages in the biography of souls.” Nursing students at Northwestern wear purple scrubs proudly, but the compassion they wear cannot be bought.

At NSU, nursing students love giving back. After all, nursing is not just about healing the sick. As potential nurses and members of the community, the students want to be at the heart of things where people really matter. You can find them volunteering in schools, churches and soup kitchens. They do not look at volunteering as just a way to pass the time; they view it as a true commitment to serving the community. Because community is so important, the instructors expect their students to participate in a service learning experience each semester.

The Student Nurses Association participates faithfully in activities, which give back to both the community and NSU students requiring any assistance. During Christmas time, the members collected toys for a local toy drive. The group is always working for the community, often seeking canned food items, hygiene items or simply asking other students to volunteer with them. The students selflessly help each other when a classmate is in need. This type of love and service that the Shreveport nursing students display is the kind that breathes life.

Serving others has given the Shreveport nursing students a new meaning to volunteering. Their service learning projects are not just a time to give back, but a time to educate the community on any health subject. The students are constantly reminded to be humble through the volunteer opportunities and sharing the experience with classmates teaches them to stay grounded. Whether it is lending a helping hand at the Shreveport Providence House, participating in walks for the Susan G. Komen Race for the Cure, filling packages at the Food Pantry, serving meals at the Salvation Army or teaching a classroom full of excited children how to wash their hands, they are constantly making a difference.

PASSIONATE PEOPLE

Northwe
NURS

Northwestern State University is the home of one of the most reputable nursing programs in Louisiana, but the curtains don't close there.

According to www.nursing.nsu.edu, NSU admitted their first class of baccalaureate nursing students in 1949. In the 1950s, the center offered a diploma in nursing after three years of training. Phasing out the diploma program in the late 1950s, NSU introduced the RN – BSN program.

Nursing education was offered on four campuses: Alexandria-Pineville, Baton Rouge, Monroe, and Shreveport. In 1968, NSU welcomed with open arms the Bachelors of Science in radiological technology. The 1970s brought a change, with the numerous clinical campuses of NSU being consolidated into one at the Shreveport campus.

Northwestern was so successful and grew even more in number by offering two additional nursing degrees, and in 1972, the ASN and MSN programs found a new home. Today the halls of the nursing and allied health main campus, located in Shreveport, are filled with clinical students dressed to go to work in nursing and radiology scrubs, proudly representing NSU.

Wearing scrubs in the classroom may be confusing to students from majors other than nursing and allied health. It is the belief of the educators that when you look professional, you are more apt to feel and act professional. Students are taught to believe in the following values: excellence, respect, caring, teamwork and professionalism. The nursing and allied health campus is the houses the the Line Avenue building, the Warrington building, a nursing lab, a new learning resource center, a library building offering a student service building, and much more.

Education is taken seriously at the Shreveport campus. Whether it's sharing conversation over cups of coffee purchased at the campus bookstore or walking to our newly paved student parking lot, we are all united in a common goal.

We are students of very diverse backgrounds all aiming for one goal: landing a successful career in healthcare. On our campus, you will find traditional college students, those looking to start a second career, single parents, married couples, all whom are trying to advance their current healthcare career and not to mention those still working fulltime jobs.

As you walk in the Line Avenue Building, you will find awards, pictures of graduates, and flyers reminding us of items needed in the community, volunteer work, and available scholarships for those in need. There are class representatives for each class, and organizations like Student Government and the Student Nurses Association.

"I wanted a good education close to home," nursing major Shandi Duffey said when asked why she chose to attend NSU.

A good education that is close to home is beneficial for students who have more responsibilities than a traditional student.

"I have always heard great things about NSU and they were the top school for nursing," second level nursing major Ashley Jackson said.

Behind every great student is a great mentor, and the instructors at Northwestern State University are anything but ordinary. As nursing students follow their clinical instructors in the halls of hospitals, they might resemble a group of purple ducklings following their mother duck. Melissa Lawson, the Second Level coordinator for the Associate of Science in Nursing Program at NSU, is one of many mother ducks at the NSU Shreveport Campus.

When first meeting Mrs. Lawson, one is greeted with compassionate eyes and a caring smile. She speaks with such passion about nursing, which not only inspires students, but ignites their fire for nursing. Though she is kind hearted, she is most definitely a force to be reckoned with when it comes to professionalism, especially with her nursing students.

In Lawson's world, students are to be professional at all times, greet one another and others with a smile, be respectful, always maintain the famous "poker face" and help anyone who needs a helping hand.

Lawson graduated from NSU with a bachelor of science in nursing in 2008. She completed her master of science in nursing from University of Phoenix in 2013. She chose nursing as a career because she has always had a passion to help others in their time of need. "I knew that nursing was an avenue that would allow me to share my love for mankind," Lawson said.

The foundation of Lawson's nursing career was in the medical intensive care unit and the fast-paced Emergency Room. She viewed these opportunities as valuable gifts of experience, which she used and needed to continue her career in community health. While working, she remained a dedicated wife and mother to four boys. Lawson decided to return to her alma mater to teach.

"I knew from the moment I left the halls of Northwestern State University that I wanted to come back and teach future nurses. I knew I wanted to give back what was given to me and to share the passion that I have for the profession of nursing," Lawson said.

Each and every day, Lawson goes the extra mile to be there for any student. She is greatly loved and appreciated by the nursing students at NSU. She hopes to remain at Northwestern State University for a while, continuing her career as a nurse educator, continuing her education and never ceasing to help each and every student.

TOUCHED BY AN ANGEL

Evgeniya Ellender, also known as Jane, is an online student from Belarus. Talking to Ellender, one can hear her distinct Russian accent, and with her accent, she put into perspective how she maintains her daily routine while also being a wife and student.

While taking online classes, Ellender discovered early on that being an online student requires a tremendous amount of discipline. “It is the most important thing,” she said.

She works Monday through Friday, from 7:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., and she has dedicated herself to not only full-time employment, but also full-time course work. In doing so, she recognizes the importance in being able to take opportunities to fit studying into her daily routine.

Ellender sometimes takes study breaks between 12 and 1 while she is at work instead of taking lunch. She said these breaks are important, but she does not force herself to study during these times, as she has other times dedicated to her studies. Ellender begins her study routine once she arrives home after work. She gives herself about an hour break before cracking open the books and diving into her school work. She said this is typically her Monday through Friday every week, however, she finds the weekends the best time to study because she typically has a full day to herself. She is able to focus on her subjects during the weekend more in-depth without any distractions or any other obligations.

Since working full-time and taking online classes full-time, Ellender has learned to sympathize with students who have children and work full-time while attending school full-time.

“I can’t imagine having children as well as working and taking classes. It’s hard enough to work and take classes,” Ellender said.

Ellender’s husband has been a huge support for her since starting her education with Northwestern State, and though she is Belarusian, her husband is American. Ellender and her husband inspire one another because they are both in school. He spends Monday through Wednesday in school for his online MBA, so his schedule is very hectic as well. The couple met about seven years ago at another institution, but stopped taking courses a few years down the road. After they were married, they decided to go back to school. Ellender said it was the best decision they could have made. And while she and her husband have some cultural differences, the differences never interfered with their relationship or studying strategies. Because English is not her first language sometimes it takes her a little longer than her husband to get the subjects.

Ellender currently works for a financial advising company, which put her in the most opportune position for her educational goal. As a business major, she plans to continue working with the organization and eventually aims to become a certified financial planner. If Ellender weren’t in school she wouldn’t be able to work in her current position. Her current studies help out quite a bit with her career goals. The classes help her to meet the requirements of her position and help her to become competitive in the field. Because her classes are directly related to what she is doing at work, she benefits from the courses immediately by being able to apply practice and theory.

As her expected graduation date of May 2015 quickly approaches, Ellender has found that her classes are getting harder, so she is not able to do as much with her social life as in the past. When she gets offers to participate in social events, she says no more often than yes, but she does make time for herself as she sees fit.

Always at the forefront of Ellender’s mind is she and her family’s future. She and her husband made up their minds that they would set up a solid financial system for themselves. She and her husband have learned the ways of the world and understand the need to have financial security. Once they have gotten their education and goals out of the way, they plan to start a family. One of Ellender’s main motivations is that she is able to show her parents that she was able to follow in their footsteps in the example that they set for her growing up as a child.

“I know my parents will be proud of me no matter what path I choose, but it is more important to prove that I can accomplish this,” Ellender said.

In working through the routine, what motivates Ellender most is knowing she has a very limited amount of time. That knowledge helps her get things done. What keeps her balanced is being a good planner. She gets social invitations, which can be distracting sometimes, but being a planner helps her with managing her time in the best possible ways. In that way she is able to choose wisely those things that will benefit her most.

THINKING

By Vanessa Posey

When Krista Cozy began her education in 2011 with Northwestern she was initially a traditional student, taking courses in the classroom. She had just graduated from high school, and it was a very exciting time. Cozy admitted taking a very unconventional route with her education, only taking a few classes here and there, but she has always made the process continuous and stayed on track.

Working through her pre-requisites, Cozy met her husband and found herself moving to Phoenix. With new and exciting changes in her life, Cozy was thankful for the online classes because it allowed her to continue her education outside of the classroom format. "As a first time mom, having access to the online classes gave me the ability to be a stay-at-home mom with a 3-month-old daughter," Cozy said.

With her new role as mother, wife and student, Cozy has made online classes work for her. She realizes how important it is to stay in touch with her fellow nursing majors and friends who are already nurses. Cozy proactively communicates with these individuals so she can get an inside perspective of how work will potentially be for her.

In addition, she takes classes that are specific to teaching her how to apply her knowledge in a hospital setting.

Cozy's experience in the delivery of her own daughter has had a very deep impact on her choice. She described with excitement and influence how she wants to be a labor and delivery nurse, thus going about her education purposefully to ensure she obtains what she wants in her career.

Being outside of the classroom has not stopped Cozy. She often goes to campus to meet with her professors, and having access to professors has made big impact on her education. Cozy enjoys classes and finds it interesting that they play a large role in her future plans. She once struggled with classes, but realized after speaking with her advisor that the courses would help her in her career goals, even the classes that seem pointless. Cozy finds the nursing classes to be very interesting, and even helpful to her in understanding her daughter's development. Cozy recognizes there are always those courses that you may not want to take or that may cause you to have some hesitation, but ultimately each of the courses are beneficial.

OUTSIDE OF THE CLASS

Cozy is excited to graduate in Fall 2016, and can't wait to see her long journey coming to an end. "I'm finally able to see light," Cozy said. Cozy sees herself as an inspiration and role model for her daughter, showing her that it is important to continue education, no matter the circumstance.

Cozy's husband is very supportive and gives her helpful and positive feedback. Cozy attributed the fact that her husband is also in school as a factor in his understanding and helping her to reach her goals.

Being outside of the classroom hasn't hindered Cozy one bit. She is an extremely organized individual, keeping a calendar of her assignments and staying ahead of the game so that she never gets behind on her work. She has a system of doing her assignments at least week in advance, so that if any event she is running late, she is still on time.

From Cozy's perspective, she feels online classes are beneficial and actually allow you to do more outside of the classroom. She advises that in order to be effective, students who are considering online classes definitely need to make time management their most important goal. Finding time to sit down just like they are in a classroom and making time to study are extremely important.

"Don't be afraid to ask for help," Cozy said. "Professors really enjoy having students ask them questions. It shows that they are interested in their course."

Even though the classes are online, participation is a must, and the classes are very engaging. Students have the ability to read other student's posts and their bios at the beginning of the course, which opens up the door to get to know each other.

"Interaction during the discussions are very engaging because you connect on a weekly basis with students of diverse backgrounds," Cozy said.

Cozy said that she has not lost any experience by taking her courses online, and she is thankful to have the online classroom setting because it will help her to realize her goals and to be the role model she wants to be for her daughter. The highlight of her completion will be finding a great job in the field she loves.

THE DRIVING FORCE IS DEDICATION

By Vanessa Posey

Photography: Submitted by Vanessa Posey

Latrell Taylor enjoyed a break from online classwork to spend time with her family and friends.

Being an online student takes a lot of focus and dedication. Latrell Taylor came to Northwestern in 2012 with an associate of applied science. She entered into the Allied Health Program determined to stay focused and to accomplish her goal of receiving her bachelor's degree in allied health. The Bridge Program was a major factor in Taylor's decision to attend Northwestern. It was just the incentive she needed to complete her bachelors.

Looking forward to graduating in December of 2016, Taylor tells other students who are preparing themselves to take online classes, "stay focused, have extra help and make sure you want to do it and can dedicate the time."

Taylor says that her husband plays a huge role in keeping her motivated. As a 35-year-old mother, who works full-time, having his support means a lot. She has four children who will head to college soon and as important as it is for her to accomplish her own goals, Taylor says that it is equally important for her to demonstrate to her children that there are no limitations to completing college.

Before beginning her studies, Taylor had a sit-down conversation with her family to discuss her desire to complete her degree, as well as the sacrifices she and they would have to make. She admittedly has had to sacrifice many family events and time with her children, but she said that her children are very understanding and it has all been worth it!

Although she begins every semester with a sense of fear, Taylor keeps herself motivated by focusing on her expected graduation date. Visualizing her completion date helps her to keep pushing and to make it through each semester. She said, "Online classes require just as much time as classes on campus, so you really have to stay focused."

Outside of her family, Taylor credits Dr. Laura Aaron for being a phenomenal motivator in her journey. She goes beyond the call of being a guidance counselor, staying in touch with Taylor's progress and helping her to set realistic goals.

Online study requires a lot of time, self-motivation and willingness to stay focused. Taylor said that her children are her driving force to stay dedicated. She wants them to see, through her, that there are "no limits and no excuses."

RECRUITMENT

finding a home away from home

By Olivia Martzell

Photography: Karalee Scouten

Each year, Northwestern State University's Greek Life holds recruitment in an attempt to attract new members to join a sorority or fraternity. NSU hosts 16 Greek organizations on campus.

This year, the College PanHellenic Council (CPC) held a formal recruitment, while the InterFraternity Council (IFC) held a semi-formal recruitment, which is more lax than formal recruitment and varies in procedure.

Sigma Sigma Sigma, Alpha Omicron Pi and Phi Mu had a three-day recruitment the second weekend of the fall semester. Potential new members toured the chapter houses Friday night, learned about each chapter's philanthropy Saturday, and attended Preferential Tea Sunday. Afterwards, they make final decisions on preferred houses. Later that afternoon, the sororities hosted a themed bid day celebration where new members were welcomed into the chapter.

The Interfraternity Council members, who are Kappa Alpha Order, Kappa Sigma, Pi Kappa Pi, Pi Kappa Alpha, Sigma Nu, Tau Kappa Epsilon and Theta Chi, held a two-week long semi-formal recruitment, starting the first day of the fall semester. Potential new members had the option to attend certain events each fraternity organized to meet chapter members, as well as the Welcome Week activities the university held for new students where the fraternity men engaged the young men. At the end of the two-week period, bids were handed out to the young men who had participated. The fraternities hold bid day celebrations where Greek and non-Greek students attended.

The National Pan-Hellenic Council, Inc. hosts several Greek organizations on NSU's campus, which are Alpha Phi Alpha, Alpha Kappa Alpha, Omega Psi Phi, Delta Sigma Theta, Zeta Phi Beta and Sigma Gamma Rho. Their process for recruiting new members is different than CPC or IFC.

Similar to open houses hosted by IFC and CPC chapters, the majority of the NPHC groups on campus hosted informationals to allow students who are interested to see what the organization is about. When students come to the informationals, they must dress in business attire and bring their transcript. NPHC informationals are usually held in spring, unlike CPC and IFC, which hold recruitment once every semester. However, unlike CPC and IFC where new members can announce their joining of the organization upon receiving a bid, NPHC members keep it a tight-guarded secret until their probate when new members are announced to the public during a performance, like a step-show.

Recruitment held by the Greek organizations on campus offers students an experience like no other during college. Although different for each organization, recruitment offers new students a chance at joining a sisterhood or brotherhood not just for four years, but for life.

no matter the letter, we're all GREEK together!

Philanthropy and service are the foundation of every Greek organization. On Northwestern's campus, there are 16 sororities and fraternities, which means 16 different philanthropies. Philanthropic events held throughout the year include Vera Bradley Bingo, the Miss Push America Pageant, Dancing with the Sigmas, the PIKE Game Ball Run from Natchitoches to Ruston, 5K races, volleyball tournaments, crawfish boils and more. At the heart of every member is a place for helping others; volunteering isn't a hobby, it's a habit.

"To me, philanthropy is about giving to others," said senior Jessica Viator. "It is about using what talents I possess and helping someone. I may not be able to cure cancer by myself, but the money I help raise surely will find a cure."

A member of Phi Mu Fraternity, Viator, has helped both Children's Miracle Network Hospitals and St. Jude Children's Research Hospital through her involvement in Phi Mu and the Unite to Fight letter writing campaign.

Service projects take place every day at Northwestern. A service project is helping the community, a group or a cause by devoting time and effort, not money. During Greek Week, members of all organizations took part in renovating and cleaning the Robeline Food Pantry. Other service projects that take place on campus and in the community are volunteering at Hope for Paws, road clean ups around campus and canned food drives. All of these events help to make someone else's life better, which is the reason why Greeks participate in service.

Seeing the children your organization benefits, meeting people who you have made an impact on, these are the reasons why so many Greek organizations devote countless hours to serving others and making a difference. Philanthropy and service create change for the better.

SERVICE PROJECT

greeks give back

By Jordan Smith

Being a Greek at Northwestern State University is more than just mixers, formals and parties. Being involved in Greek Life means giving back to communities, and that is what Greek Week is all about.

The popular novel and film trilogy, The Hunger Games was the theme of Greek Week 2014. “May the gods be ever in your favor,” was the slogan for the event. The idea was based on the popular line in the books and movies. The event began in early March when the Greek Week 2014 committee hosted the official “Reaping” of Greek Week teams. One representative from each chapter on campus attended the reaping. The fraternities and sororities were placed into one of three “districts,” or teams. District One consisted of Alpha Omicron Pi, Zeta Phi Beta, Theta Chi and Pi Kappa Alpha. District Five consisted of Sigma Sigma Sigma, Alpha Phi Alpha, Kappa Alpha and Kappa Sigma. Finally, District Twelve consisted of Phi Mu, Alpha Kappa Alpha, Sigma Nu, Tau Kappa Epsilon and Pi Kappa Phi. Three districts participated, but only one could win. So, there had to be a competition.

Greek Week kicked off the way any Southern gathering kicks off, with a bar-b-que. All of the members in the participating sororities and fraternities gathered together for some food, fun and games. Greek Week continued with the competition phase. The Greeks met at Organizational Row and competed in multiple events, including boat race, track meet, trivia and capture the flag. Later in the week, the Interfraternity Council at NSU hosted a golf scramble for the Greeks that wanted to show off their talent on the green.

Fun and games isn’t all Greek Week is about. After a day filled with competition, the Greek’s became prepared to do what they do best: community service. Each member of the participating Greek fraternities and sororities signed up for one of three shifts to travel to Robeline, where they volunteered a day of services to the town’s local food pantry. The Greek’s painted, decorated and helped in any way they could at the Robeline Food Pantry. Following the day of volunteering, all of the Greek Week participants gathered at the Natchitoches Country Club for a night of recognition. With a meal catered by Masion Louisiane and awards given away, the members of the Greek life spent their night in style.

Greek Week concluded with the last event, Victor’s Village, where the Greek’s were recognized for their outstanding work at the Robeline Food Pantry. Victor’s Village also is where the winning district was crowned. Greek Week 2014’s Champion was, drumroll please, District Twelve, which consisted of Phi Mu, Alpha Kappa Alpha, Sigma Nu, Tau Kappa Epsilon and Pi Kappa Phi. The gods were ever in their favor. Although Greek Week is filled with fun and exciting games and events, the ultimate purpose of the weeklong event is to give back to communities.

STEP SHOWS

Northwestern State University is home to many different sororities and fraternities. Several of those fraternities and sororities proudly put on step shows throughout the school year “Stepping is a form of dancing and clapping hands in a performance. Anyone can learn how to step. It takes a lot of time and effort to learn the movements. Everyone has to be on point and in sync with each other so it looks good for the crowd,” Brian Cook, a member of Alpha Phi Alpha, an organization that puts on step shows, said.

The different Greek organizations involved also travel to other colleges and universities that host step shows. The group that does the best step show could win money or other prizes.

There are many different reasons why organizations put on a step show. The step shows could be an annual event or for Homecoming. Step shows could also be used to help raise money for the fraternity or sorority. Most step shows are competition based and allow for sororities and fraternities to come together and compete with one another.

Alpha Phi Alpha puts on two step shows a year. The fall step show is put on at the NCPH, National Pan-Hellenic Council, Mixer. The Golden Explosion is the biggest step show NSU has and it happens in the spring.

the sport of cheerleading

At Northwestern State University, cheerleading is not just a sideshow at football or basketball games. It is a sport of its own. NSU cheerleaders are competitive athletes who have won national recognition for their skill.

Head Coach Amy Stepp said the cheer squad of 2014 performed better at camp than they had before in her eight years at NSU. They won first overall, most collegiate, camp favorites and numerous other awards. Stepp said that if the team had won first in the fight song competition, they would have won every award possible.

In January 2014, the cheer team also exceeded expectations during their first time competing at nationals in Orlando, Fla., taking home fourth place in their division. A group of 16 cheerleaders represents NSU in competition.

"This year is just a good team, athletically and as a family," junior health and exercise science major Lakyn Ward said. "I feel like we're really close."

In addition to breaking new ground in competition, the cheer squad had also grown in numbers, totaling 26 members in the fall. The coaching staff had also grown from one coach to three coaches.

"The team has transitioned drastically over the past seven years," Stepp said. "There was a time that no coach was assigned to the team, and now we have three. Alumni cheerleaders constantly pop in and out of practices and are proud to have been a part of the team."

Stepp married squad member Chase Stepp in 2014, and Chase Stepp joined the coaching staff after he graduated in May. Alumna Ruth Frugé also joined the coaching staff.

Stepp described the 2014 squad as "goal-oriented."

"The program has begun to recruit better athletes, and it shows through practices and performances," she said.

Senior pre-physical therapy major Christian Broussard said his experience on the cheer squad helped him build communication skills and form lasting friendships. He said this year's squad is a good mixture of veteran and rookie athletes with "amazing potential."

Broussard started cheering during his sophomore year in college. He was an athlete in high school and was recruited by friends to join NSU's cheer squad after a knee injury prevented him from playing football in college.

The majority of male cheerleaders are athletes who did not cheer in high school. Stepp prefers to have a few extra male cheerleaders so that the old ones can train in.

the purple pizazz

By Jessie Gabor

The Purple Pizazz Pom line consists of 26 ladies who all share one thing in common: their love of dance.

A precision pom routine is a dance choreographed with strength and accuracy. It incorporates cheer motions with hip-hop and jazz technique. The pom line performs at all football and basketball home games. They march in the annual homecoming parade and perform at various events in Natchitoches.

“We participate in many different events throughout the community,” said freshman accounting major, Caroline Aydelott. “The annual Christmas Festival and the campus cleanup are also events worth being involved in,” Aydelott said.

Dedication is a major requirement to be on Pom Line. When asked how much dedication is required to be a part of Pom Line, Captain Taylor Layman responded, “1,000 percent... really!” Pom line practices eight hours weekly. “We practice every day, which takes true dedication,” Aydelott said. “Especially when it comes to workouts that start at 6:30 a.m.”

Pom Line conducts team fundraisers and participates in service opportunities around campus and the community. “We never really get a day off because we are always trying to better ourselves as individuals and as a team,” Layman said.

Pom Line not only provides an extracurricular for its members, but a great addition to the “college experience.”

“Pom Line has made my college experience great so far,” Aydelott said. “Not many are able to say that they are on a collegiate team. I enjoy every moment of participating in an activity that I love, especially with girls I can call my sisters!” Aydelott said.

Layman emphasizes the sisterhood that forms with every member on the team. “My favorite part of Pom Line is the sisterhood that each member joins,” Layman said. “We go through everything together, including laughs, tears, sweat and blood, but there is no better feeling to walk off of the field or court after a performance and be surrounded by your best friends, knowing that every perfect performance is a team effort,” said Layman.

Not only is Pom Line an extra curricular for women who share a mutual love for dance, but is also a unity and sisterhood.

DEMON DAZZLERS

they came to dazzle

By Apryl Jenkins

The Demon Dazzlers are the official precision jazz line and auxiliary unit to the Spirit of Northwestern band. They perform at pep rallies, football and basketball games, the Lady of the Bracelet pageant and Senior and Junior days. Countless hours in rehearsals and various performances make for a time consuming job, but for the team of 13, it is all worth it to be able to do what they love.

“Waking up for early morning rehearsals can be tough, but I am so passionate about dancing that it is all worth it. I love that we are required to work out because it keeps me in shape,” junior Taylor Walker said.

As one of three spirit groups at Northwestern, Dazzlers are distinguished from the rest by their precise jazz moves. They incorporate technical elements into their routines that stem from ballet and jazz styles. Members are required to take a dance technique course to sharpen their skills.

When considering field shows and various pep rally routines, they must retain quite a bit of choreography. Co-Captain Taylor Walker and Lt. Crystal Brooks explained that coming up with fresh ideas for routines it is a collaborative effort. Director Renee Oates along with the team captains work together to choreograph the dances they perform throughout the year.

Oates said one of the biggest challenges when working with a new team is to train the dancers to move as one unit. The girls all come from different backgrounds and styles that they grew up learning, so they must focus on the tiny details to really make the movements sharp.

Dancing with the band is a new experience for many incoming Dazzlers. Scary, confusing and intimidating are some of the adjectives that were used to describe their first experience.

Freshman Elizabeth Guerrero laughed as she explained what it’s like.

“The band director is screaming this terminology at you, you have no idea what it means and then the band starts playing and you just kind of have to go with it to avoid getting hit by an instrument.”

Guerrero feels that her first year on the team has gone by quickly.

“When I am spending time in practice with my team, I never feel like my time is wasted. With classes and everything else going on this is where I can release my stress.”

The girls on the team are like a family because they spend so much time together. They all share a love of dance and it shows in their dazzling smiles as they kick, turn and leap across the football field. They attend workouts at 7 a.m. twice a week as well as studio and band practice Monday through Thursday. The Dazzlers are a competitive dance team. Last spring they attended the American Dance and Drill Team Collegiate Championship, where they placed second runner-up in Division I.

SPIRIT OF NORTHWESTERN

best sounding band in the land

By Chelsea Taylor

Photography: Karalee Scouten and Derrick Notice

Every Monday, Wednesday and Friday, students all across campus heard the Spirit of Northwestern Demon Marching Band practice their music as they marched across their practice field. In rain, wind, or blistering heat dedicated members spent time and energy practicing to be the best. Countless hours were spent practicing drill and going through music.

NSU's Demon Marching Band brings support, school spirit and entertainment to every home football game. No matter where someone sits in Turpin Stadium, they will hear the Spirit of Northwestern, or "SON," cheering on the Demon football team. These members share their school spirit at every pep rally, parade, marching contest and football game they attend.

NSU prides itself in keeping up traditions. The SON works hard to uphold the tradition of being a great band that supports NSU. The Spirit of Northwestern does this by performing their pregame show before every home football game. The Alma Mater, fight song and a good show are staples in NSU's home games.

This year, the SON performed three different shows. Their first show had an outer space theme to it. The SON played music from Star Wars, Star Trek, Superman, The Planet Suites, Moon Dance and Frank Sinatra's "Fly Me to the Moon." Their second show incorporated Latin elements. The SON performed El Toro, Caliente and Malaga. The SON showed their love for NSU and Natchitoches in their third show, for Natchitoches' tricentennial, in which they performed music from Steel Magnolias.

The Northwestern State University Demon Heat color guard brings color and flair to the football field with flags, sabers, rifles and intricate choreography. To be a member of color guard means you must be able to multi-task. Members have to march, count, perform routines and stay in step, while remembering to put on their best performance smile.

The Demon Heat color guard demands attention during halftime of football games. From the moment they step on the field and fly their flags at right shoulder, the crowd is in awe and remains seated to watch an entertaining and spectacular halftime show. Although the performances are fantastic, the practices are what are even more interesting. The color guard begins their season with an intense audition process. Once members are chosen, practices begin. The guard spends hours under the hot Louisiana sun learning their coordinates, practicing their marching and perfecting their routines. When band members get to go inside to perfect their music and tuning, the color guard stays outside and practices more. Even though marching season ends, color guard continues. The color guard moves on to a competition phase known as winter guard. Instead of having a marching band at their disposal, the Demon Heat performs to music on a CD and the performance takes place in an arena or a gym. Instead of marching uniforms, more elaborate costumes are worn along with dramatic make up. A theme is usually involved in winter guard. For winter guard, the choreography, tosses and flags are bigger. Everything is more elaborate. The crowd isn't there to watch football, but they are there to focus on just the color guard.

Besides performing at football games, exhibitions and winter guard shows, the Demon Heat had an even more entertaining event. In March 2015, the Demon Heat joined the Spirit of Northwestern Marching Band in a trip to Ireland, where they marched in the Dublin St. Patrick's Parade.

Color guard is not just fun and games. Rigorous practices, stretches and choreography keep the Demon Heat color guard looking clean, sharp and precise. Make up and hairspray are a necessity for color guard to keep their look fresh. Innovative choreography, spins and tosses keep the crowd in their seats at half time and demand attention.

Argus is an annual art and literary magazine that showcases talent in four categories: art, poetry, creative non-fiction and fiction writing. It is the primary publication of NSU's creative talents written, edited and produced all by students. A panel of judges awards cash prizes to the first, second and third place winners in each category. This year's theme was "Facing Rain." First year Editor Olivia Hadams along with the Argus staff worked together to decide the theme. Hadams explained that the idea was to express the different contexts that people associate with rain.

"Rain is viewed by some as purifying and cleansing while others view it as dreary and sad. For me, the idea was to capture those different connotations and relate it to how we face the good and bad that comes with life," Hadams said.

Argus is an award winning publication that has captured recognition from the Associated Collegiate Press "Best of Show-Literary Magazine" competition and a "Best of the South" award for college magazines from the Southeastern Journalism Conference. For the last two years, the editor, along with a few of the staff members, attended the annual Association of Writers and Writing Programs Conference where they attended panels on editing, design, journal writing and more.

Hadams is a senior biology major. She is also the secretary of Brainy Acts Poetry Society. Her passion for helping people as well as for writing is what drew her to the position. NSU students from any major are encouraged to submit work. One of the goals the staff looks to accomplish with each issue is to give students a chance to be noticed through their work and to allow it to influence others.

"By showing this kind of raw emotion and vulnerability, I would hope that after reading, people can experience a growth and discovery of themselves," Hadams said.

Submissions for Argus are accepted until the end of November and the book is released in the spring semester.

The yearbook's job is capturing the spirit of a single year, condensing all the excitement, disappointment, monotony and triumph of the year into a few hundred pages. Members of the Potpourri staff don't take that job lightly.

Everyone has cracked open an old yearbook and gawked at trends of the past, marveling at how much has changed and how much has stayed the same. The yearbook is more than a novelty, however, for those who appear in its pages. It marks down in history that they were here, that they sat in Turpin Stadium, that they walked down Front Street and watched as the town lit up at Christmas.

"The whole year is preserved in this one book," Potpourri Editor Jordan Smith, a senior liberal arts major and mass communication major, said. "Students 40 years from now are going to look back and see all the things that they did."

Smith started as a staff writer for the Potpourri last year and found herself applying for editor in the spring. She said that being a part of the yearbook has opened her up to writing as both a future career and a hobby. Stepping up as editor this year has also given her a glimpse at the many different aspects of the yearbook, from writing and photography to design and production. Smith said she spends most of her time checking in on the staff and making sure pages are ready for each of the yearbook's deadlines.

A new responsibility was also added to the editor's job description in 2014. After the yearbook hired off-campus staff members in the fall semester, Smith spent a lot of her time keeping up with them through email. Smith said she wanted to better represent the university's satellite campuses and online community by hiring students in those outlets instead of attempting to cover them from Natchitoches.

Smith brought the Potpourri Professor of the Year competition back as well. Students nominated their favorite professors and voted on a winner.

Senior writer and photographer Chelsea Taylor, a mass communication major and photography minor, said her experience on the yearbook staff has shown her more about herself.

"It has definitely made me better at managing my time, because now I have to balance more," Taylor said.

The Potpourri staff makes memories of their own in the process of recording the memories of the student body. Being on the yearbook is, for them, both a great responsibility and a great privilege, and they work consistently to bring students a yearbook they can all be proud of.

music, talk and news

By Kathleen Barkley

Above: All students have the chance to host their own radio show on KNWD.

KNWD Radio is an on-campus radio station that plays music of all genres, allows students to report campus-wide news, promote on and off campus events and gives students on the staff first-hand experience of what it is like to run a radio show. The radio station is led by Advisor Arthur Dew and senior General Manager Daniel Thiels.

A typical day in the life of a KNWD radio host is not an easy one. Matthew Lingle describes his days as “hectic and stressful, but completely worth it.” Lingle co-hosts “News at Noon,” on 91.7 The Demon. Every Tuesday and Thursday at noon, he, along with his two co-hosts, share the latest news, weather and sports updates on air with the student body. He begins his week by gathering events that will take place on campus during the week to come. He then comprises the news into brief segments that he shares with the student body. His show begins with a look at sports. Comprised of LSU, Saints and NSU football, the student body is updated on scores, star players from the games and key plays, along with opinions about the teams. A break is taken to play a few songs, then Lingle comes on air to talk to the students about what events are taking place around campus that week. Then, a brief weather forecast is given.

Lingle brings guests in as often as possible from student organizations. The guests talk about their organizations, how other students can get involved and who to contact to get involved. He says it is a great way to promote student activities and inform students on how they can get involved and stay active on campus.

“Featuring student organizations on The Demon has helped a lot of campus organizations grow,” he said. “The students seem to respond well to our guests and to our show as a whole.”

Along with radio shows, the staff at KNWD promotes their station through social media. Their website, www.knwdradio.org, streams all of their radio shows live. It also allows them to stream the NSU Symphony Band concerts live. This gives teachers, students and families that cannot attend the concerts the opportunity to listen to the concerts live. The radio station also has an active Facebook page, www.facebook.com/KNWDnsu, where students can stay updated on all the news that KNWD offers.

After graduating from NSU, Lingle hopes to use his experience from KNWD The Demon to eventually launch his own radio show. “The experience has helped me so much, and I know that in the long run, it will benefit me. I am hoping that my experience at 91.7 KNWD The Demon will show radio stations that I am hardworking, committed and talented,” Lingle said.

KNWD has a growing staff each semester as well as a growing audience. With each group of new students, comes a fresh set of listeners as well as potential staff members. The station is looking forward to the staff and student interest growing.

Celebrating the 100th anniversary of anything is exciting, but for one staff this anniversary meant more than just another year. Northwestern State University has a long-standing tradition of providing factual and accurate information through the student run newspaper, The Current Sauce. This year's volume of The Current Sauce, or The Sauce as it is more commonly referred to, celebrated 100 years of excellence through delivering the news to the NSU campus.

The Sauce employs editors, photographers and columnists to cover all of the latest news and events around campus. The newspaper is written, edited, published and delivered all in a week's span. The finished product would not be possible without the hard work and dedication of the editors for this year's staff.

The Current Sauce started in 1914 as a biweekly tabloid newsletter for Contemporary Life Club. The paper has always covered the current buzz or news feed around Northwestern's campus and a 1915 gossip column, whose title read, "What's the latest sauce" became the favorable title of the newspaper.

After changes to the paper and the set-up, the newspaper began adding sports columns, opinions and movie reviews, but always covered the latest news, no matter what the subject matter. The topics varied in style, but could always be counted on for their facts and accuracy. The paper covered everything from the feminist movement in 1915 to life in Natchitoches while World War II was in full swing in Europe.

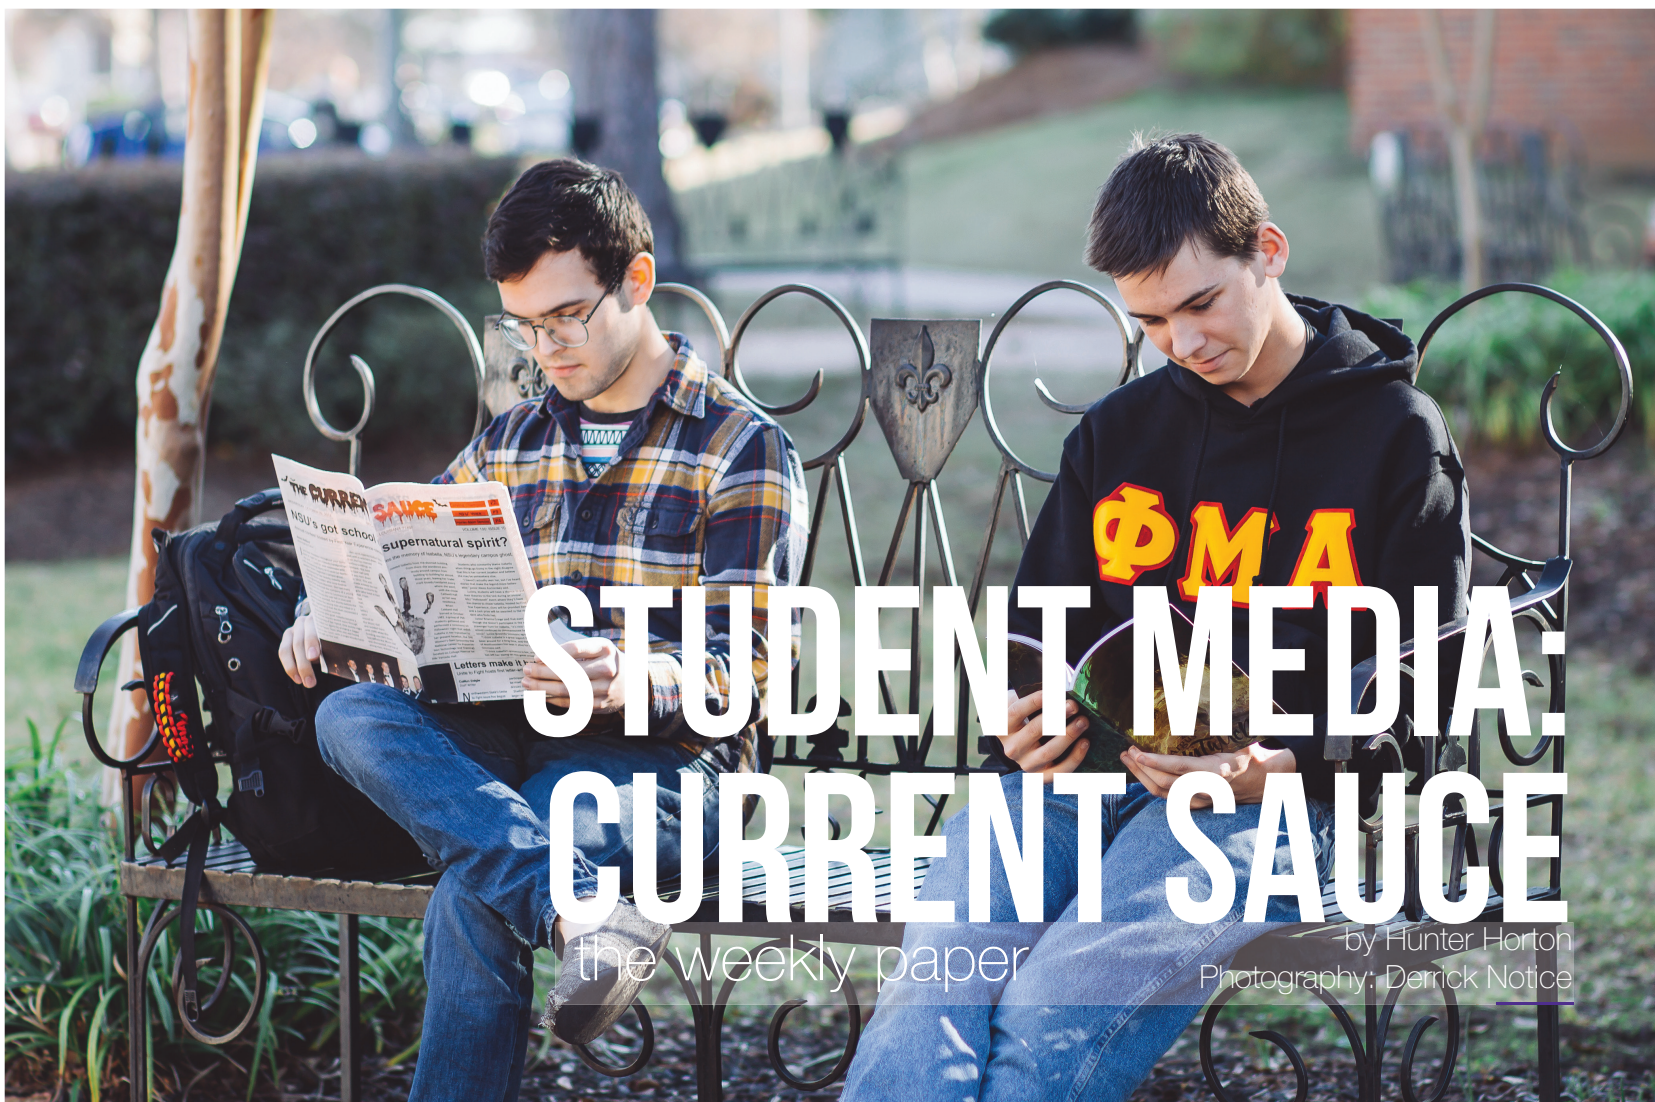

In the spring of 2014, The Current Sauce hosted a Centennial Celebration for current and past sauce members. The celebration was attended by former staff members and was enjoyed by those currently on the NSU campus. The celebrations served as an occasion of fun and remembrance of where the paper has been and where the paper is going.

"We as a news staff feel that it is imperative to deliver timely and most importantly, accurate news of the Northwestern campus. I am honored to have been chosen as the editor of the 100th year of the Current Sauce and I hope to see the paper survive for at least another 100 years," said Editor-in-Chief Emily Frame.

The Current Sauce has a long-standing tradition of providing Northwestern State University with timely and honest news and this is a direct result of the 100 years of hardworking staff and advisors. The Sauce has made its name at Northwestern and will continue to do so for many years in the future.

STUDENT ACTIVITIES BOARD

2014-2015 Student Activities Board

Northwestern State University may not be the most exciting campus in the world, but 31 students on the Student Activities Board work hard to create fun and interesting events for the students on campus.

“SAB is a group of students striving to do the best events possible for the student body,” junior Tyra Morrison said.

The SAB plans most events on campus such as Spring Fling, the annual crawfish boil, Homecoming, Halloweek and the Lady of the Bracelet pageant.

“There are only a few events that we don’t plan, like Freshman Connection and Welcome Week. We do put on a few events during Welcome Week to help add to the activities,” President Alayni Guidry said.

SAB representatives work hard to manage their time and plan events. It takes true dedication and a good work ethic to get everything done on the SAB to-do list. There are times when SAB is planning multiple events at once.

All SAB representatives have to complete three work hours weekly. Two of those hours are spent in committee meetings and the other in a weekly SAB meeting. Student Activities Board representatives have to spend the last hour working in the SAB office.

“Being on SAB is strenuous. We are constantly working. We have to work one hour at a small event or the whole time if it is a major event. It takes sleepless nights, long working hours and long leadership seminars, but I wouldn’t trade it for the world.” Tyra Morrison said.

No one knows this feeling better than Guidry.

“I have been serving on the Student Activities Board ever since I was a freshman. I have been the president for two years now. Working on SAB is a full time job and I have loved every minute of it,” Guidry said.

Occasionally students have come to an SAB representative with ideas. Students can either voice their ideas at the weekly open floor meeting or they can talk to a representative.

“We have a diverse group of students this year. Even with 31 minds, we can’t think of everything. We are always reaching out to students to try and figure out what they want to see on campus,” Guidry said.

The Student Government Association at Northwestern State University has always provided campus-wide leadership while still maintaining the utmost respect and care for the NSU campus they call home. “The purpose of this organization shall be to serve as a liaison between the Student Body and the Administration, and recommending any desirable change concerning any aspect of student life,” according to nsula.orgsync.com/org/nsusga/home.

SGA President Kyla Winey said, “SGA is developing a positive relationship with our faculty and administration by attending roundtables, addressing the problems and making sure that the students input is readily available and taken seriously.”

The association involves the student body in as many meetings and events as possible to ensure a quality university experience for all students. Recently, Winey was actively involved in choosing the 18th president of NSU, an honor only given to one student. The leaders in SGA maintain various other leadership positions around campus in which they serve the students and faculty.

Chief of Staff Cayla Mendow said, “With a larger group, we have established a reputable name that future campus leaders can aspire to be a part of. Our goal is to ensure that we leave behind a solid foundation for our organization so student involvement in university processes and politics can continue to thrive.” The organization serves to provide an environment that fosters learning, but is an experience for each and every student.

Amidst the many changes that are occurring at NSU this coming year, one thing for the student government will remain the same; their desire to serve the students. The cabinet is always actively involved in leading the campus in improving the educational experience for students. While they serve as mediators between NSU staff and students, the Student Government Association strive to create an experience that is desired by all Northwestern students.

SGA is always looking for new ways to innovate the learning experience for NSU and its’ students. Winey said, “We have resolved many student concerns as in Wi-fi for Iberville, being a monumental part of the Presidential Search and writing bills like SB.F.2014-02 which refers to the gates being closed no earlier than 10 p.m.”

The regular meetings serve to inform the students of the latest changes to the NSU experience. According to the members, these meetings are vital to running an efficient government that serves the people of the community.

ALAYNI GUIDRY

By Chelsea Taylor
Photography: Chris Reich

Many students at Northwestern State University know the phrase “Find yourself at Northwestern.” No one knows this better than senior Alayni Guidry.

“I found myself through leadership, Greek life and academics here at Northwestern State University. NSU has become my home away from home,” Guidry said.

Guidry found a home at NSU by getting involved in everything she could. Guidry first got involved by joining the President’s Leadership Program. After that, it was a domino effect. Guidry then joined Phi Mu and the Student Activities Board. From there she became a Freshman Connector and joined honor societies.

Being active in all those organizations isn’t easy. Guidry had to balance her time wisely. She kept a monthly calendar for major events, a notebook with daily to-do lists and reminders on her phone.

“I have to write everything down. That is the only way I can keep up with everything. If I don’t then I will forget what I need to get done,” Guidry laughed.

Guidry looks back at her college time fondly. She loved attending NSU and being active on campus. She recalls sitting outside doing homework and walking around campus just to enjoy the beauty of it.

“I feel like we forget the beauty of this campus sometimes,” Guidry said with a smile.

The biggest highlight of her NSU career was being crowned Homecoming Queen in 2013.

“It was a good feeling to know that people wanted you to win and they voted for you,” she said.

Guidry was announced as Miss Push America in October 2014. Participating in a pageant was a new experience for Guidry. She had planned the Lady of the Bracelet pageant a few years ago and even attended pageants.

“When they announced my name, I was in shock. I couldn’t believe that I had won my first pageant,” Guidry explained.

There is one thing Guidry wishes she could change about her college experience. She wishes she had spent more time living in the moment and less time planning everyday.

“It’s good to have a plan in college, but we should stop focusing so much on our plan and more on having fun,” Guidry said.

JALAN WEST

By Kathleen Barkley
Photography: Gary Hardamon

The Northwestern State University men's basketball team is led by a star in the making. When fans watch the team run across the court and work to earn a Demon victory, they can be sure to look for the player with number 12 on his jersey. When you spot the 5-foot-10, 175-pound player, you have found Jalan West.

West came to NSU after graduating from Bossier High School in 2011. While in high school, West racked up honors left and right while playing basketball. West was a three-time All-District selection during his high school career, and some recruiting services ranked him as high as the number two prospect in the state of Louisiana.

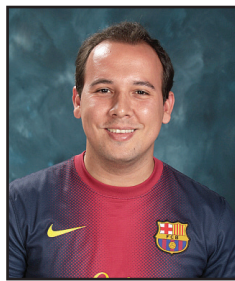

West has proven to be a valuable player and recruit at NSU. Due to NCAA Clearinghouse issues, West was redshirted during the 2011-2012 basketball season, but he made up for the lost time during the 2012-2013 season. He started in the first five games and then moved into the second wave.

The honors seemed to attach to West like a magnet. During the season, he was the only freshman named on the Southland Conference All-Defensive Team, Southland Conference Freshman of the Year, All-Southland Conference Honorable Mention team and the Louisiana Sports Writers Association All-Louisiana Honorable Mention Team.

He was the fourth leading scorer for Southland Tournament champs. If his honors are not enough to impress fans, then his national rankings are sure to. In his career, West has been ranked 11th nationally in assist/turnover ratio, 17th in steals and 55th in assists.

"My biggest goal is to give back and give a better life for my family," said West. He added he just works hard overall and stays humble. That hard work has greatly rewarded both him and the Demon basketball program.

KIMBERLY MOSIER

By Emily Fontenot
Photography: Joshua Mitchell

Sophomore Kimberly Mosier, 19, came to college already a graduate, but not a traditional one. She graduated with a rather unique diploma four years ago as a certified clown.

Although Mosier decided to attend Disciple Clown College as a way to meet new friends at church, she soon discovered it would be much more than she anticipated.

"I quickly realized that the things most clowns were good at, I was horrible at," she said. "I couldn't juggle to save my life."

Mosier found her niche in other areas, like telling jokes and signing. As an only child with a love of storytelling and a flair for the dramatic, Mosier used her natural talents to do more than just entertain the crowd.

"I learned clowns aren't just there to be funny, but that they somehow give a message," she said.

She volunteered as a clown at festivals, children's events and retirement homes. Through stories, skits and jokes, she tried to convey a message of love and hope to the people she entertained.

Through humor and storytelling, Mosier has been able to really discover who she is.

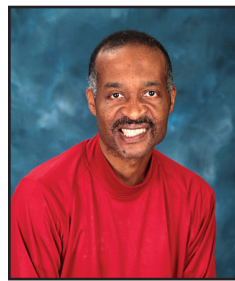

After latching on to an opportunity she found through email, she also began teaching students from all over the world how to speak English about a year ago.

"It sometimes feels like I'm a student by day and a teacher by night," Mosier said.

She currently has about eight students from all over the world, and she was recently able to meet one of her students face to face. She has gotten to learn about other cultures and further her understanding of people in general. She's also been able to share her faith with others while gaining a better understanding of theirs.

As a student by day, a teacher by night and a part-time clown comedian, Mosier has never shied away from a challenge and continues to embrace her own identity as the one and only "Ms. Glitterbutt."

ADAM PATRICK

By Jessie Gabor
Photography: Derrick Notice

Adam Patrick, junior criminal justice major, is not only a full time student, but also a sergeant with the Natchitoches Parish Sheriff's Office in the Corrections Division.

Patrick has managed to keep up with his schooling while working from 5 p.m. to 5 a.m. during the week. Not only does Patrick balance school and work, he also finds time to be the grand treasurer for the Kappa Sigma Fraternity at NSU, the secretary/treasurer for the Inter-Fraternal Counsel at NSU, the sergeant at arms for the Criminal Justice club, and a DJ for NSU's radio station KNWD The Demon.

When asked to describe a typical day on the job, Patrick explained excitedly, "We count the inmates four times per shift to ensure that all inmates are accounted for. When my shift officers arrive, I assign them to an area, which contains four dorms of inmates, which they must patrol during their shift. Being a shift sergeant, I periodically patrol those areas as well to ensure that my officers are patrolling sufficiently and to assist them with their duties," Patrick said. "I primarily work in the booking area. In booking, I enter information about people when they are arrested and take their fingerprints for our AFIS system. The AFIS computer sends my entries to the FBI for their records. The majority of my job is maintaining the security of the facility. This can mean diffusing conflicts, searching for contraband, monitoring inmate activity or monitoring my officers activity."

Patrick explained that he loved almost all aspects of his job, but his favorite part of his job, however, is performing a "shakedown."

"During a shakedown, I will order all inmates to sit on their bunks. Then my officers and I will individually search each inmate for anything on his person. Once each inmate has been searched, we search their footlockers and the area around their bunk for any contraband. Once all of the inmates' property has been searched, we search the common areas of the dorm," said Patrick. "Common areas are under tables, under the sinks in the bathroom area, and any other location that we think an inmate could hide something. Contraband can range from an extra blanket to marijuana, a cell phone, homemade tattoo guns or sharp homemade weapons called shanks."

Although Patrick loves his job, he explained that the reason he took the job was to be able to accomplish finishing college without having to take out student loans.

"It did not take long for me to begin liking my job, and I do have a passion for corrections," Patrick said. "I want to be involved in the criminal justice system in a different manner. I want to attend law school and eventually become a prosecuting attorney."

With being a full time student and a correctional officer, there's no questioning that Adam Patrick is definitely not an ordinary student at NSU.

KYLA WINEY

By Hunter Horton

Photography: Tra'van Cooper

Most students come to Northwestern with hopes of getting involved, but Kyla Winey takes getting involved personally. Winey has achieved near impossible feats as a Northwestern student that some students will not achieve in a lifetime.

Winey graduated from Acadiana High School in Lafayette and was admitted to Northwestern State University in the fall of 2011. She became a sister of Phi Mu Fraternity and through her four years never held an executive position as she focused on other areas of extracurricular activities.

Winey joined Student Government Association and immediately became an integral member of the esteemed organization. After rising through the ranks of SGA, Winey eventually was elected as President for two terms.

“My job as president was to always have the students’ betterment as first priority, to keep the morale of the senate in high spirits and to keep in constant communication with the faculty, staff and students of Northwestern,” said Winey.

She stated that her most rewarding part of SGA was “being able to serve the students of Northwestern and that my leadership always focused on the students’ needs before my own.”

Along with SGA and Phi Mu, Winey was actively involved in Purple Jackets, Blue Key, NSU TV, Current Sauce, KNWD Radio, Freshmen Connector and was a freshman scholar for a student media organization.

“In high school, I was not as involved as I had wanted to be, but when I came to NSU, I was able to make my own name and establish myself as a leader and communicator,” said Winey.

Winey completed her mass communication degree in seven semesters, and successfully communicating has always been something that Winey felt passionately about.

Winey stated that her proudest accomplishment in her seven semesters at NSU was being chosen to the selection committee for Northwestern’s newest president, Dr. Jim Henderson. She was an integral part of the process in selecting the newest leader.

“I was at home when I received the call that I had been chosen to represent the NSU students and I honestly could not believe that I was selected,” said Winey.

She attended several meetings in Baton Rouge before settling on Dr. Henderson, and Winey was involved in every step of the process. She was able to become closely acquainted with Dr. Webb and Dr. Henderson, and she is very grateful to NSU for allowing her to be involved.

A strong family support base is something that Winey attributes for the majority of her success.

“My family has always been most important to me and without them, I would not be the leader I am today,” said Winey.

She stated that her mother always told her to reach for the stars and that her dad told her to keep a level head. Winey claims that it was a healthy combination of the two strong willed personalities that molded her into the young lady she has become. In 10 years, Winey would like to be a news anchor covering the latest political and world news.

LETTER FROM THE EDITOR

Jordan Smith, Editor in Chief

This experience has been anything but easy, but I am nothing short of thankful for it. I've not only learned more about the journalism field and Northwestern State University, but more about myself—something I didn't think was possible.

I'd like to thank the staff for their continuous hard work in getting this book completed. Every photo and story in this book was created with an appreciation for mass communication and NSU. Whether the work was done early, late or somewhere in between, there was passion in everything created.

Thank you to Jessie, Nick and Kara for your late hours and creativity. I couldn't have done any of this without you all.

Thank you to Mrs. Masson for your guidance and expertise. Advising the Potpourri is a task not every professor would like to take on, but you do it with such selflessness. We are all thankful for your help throughout the process.

Lastly, thank you to the students and faculty of Northwestern State University for allowing me this opportunity. It's a daunting task to put an entire year into one semester of work, but the staff and I worked constantly. I hope we have created something the university and students are proud of.

The Potpourri has such an important and unique job of preserving the history of NSU, and I will forever be thankful that I was able to preserve this history I witnessed.
